Author of Dispatch to London Referee Asserts That He Has Found Grave of Lord Kitchener Near Shore

EXISTENCE IS ALLEGED OF PROOF OF IDENTITY

Sea Currents and Winds Are Said to Have Swept Others From Ill-Fated Ship to Same Neighborhood

Special Dispatch to the North American Newspaper Alliance

(Copyright in Great Britain by The Referee, and in the United States by the North America Newspaper Alliance.)

LONDON, Aug. 7.—It is with a profound sense it means to all the millions who cherish the great soldier's memory and above all to the armies which he inspired and organized that I am able to announce that I am bringing to England the remains of Earl Kitchener of Khartum.

It is tha fulfillment of a purpose which has never left my thoughts through the years that have passed since the wreck of the Hampshire. It may well be a final solution of what has long been held to be a mystery.

Under circumstances of great difficulty, but with the encouragement of a few of the late Earl's relatives and intimate friends, I have been able to carry through my task. To many of my readers it will not, of course, be unknown that I and others have for a long time entertained the belief that it was to Scandinavia that we should look for the grave of Lord Kitchener. We believed that winds and currents would in all likelihood carry the body to Norway. During the weeks which followed the disaster which robbed England of her war leader, many bodies were thrown up on that wild coast, one of which, there were reasons to believe, was that of the Earl himself.

Bodies Found on Norway's Coast

This possibility had, as a matter of fact, been suggested at intervals ever since the disaster. It had been stated that among the bodies found by fishermen on the Norwegian coast in the Summer of 1916 was that of a tall well-built officer with an unusual uniform of greenish khaki of the best quality, just like that which Lord Kitchener was wearing, and a line of ribbon much tattered and discolored.

My own conviction on the point had

Leading Banker to Arrive Here Tomorrow

SIR FREDERICK WILLIAMS-TAYLOR

GENERAL MANAGER TO ARRIVE MONDAY

SIR F. WILLIAMS-TAYLOR IS INSPECTING BRANCHES OF BANK OF MONTREAL

Well-Known Banker Meeting Branch Managers at Western Centres During Tour

Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, general manager of the Bank of Montreal, will arrive in the city tomorrow morning, accompanied by Lady Williams-Taylor.

He is now inspecting branches in the West. Owing to a recent bereavement Sir Frederick is not accepting a number of invitations to address public bodies through the country.

The general manager is accompanied by Major Watt R. Creighton, chief of personnel. The visitors reached Vancouver on Wednesday from Jasper Park.

Lady Williams-Taylor, as a well-known writer, synchronized her arrival in Vancouver with the convention of the Canadian Authors' Association.

Canada's Position

In Winnipeg, Sir Frederick said in part: "Canada's position today is a tribute to her recuperative powers. Compare conditions here with any other country which participated in the war from the very first and you will realize how fortunate we are. We still have a heavy load of taxation to carry, but like Great Britain we are one of the very few countries which are meeting their war obligations fully and unreservedly. Not only that, but we are improving our condition every day. During the current year there has been a noticeable betterment in domestic business, and the expansion of our export trade, with an increasing balance in our favor, is a tribute to the energy and enterprise with which we, as a people are putting our house in order.

Better Times Ahead

"In Eastern Canada manufacturing and mercantile interests have been having a hard time for several years past, but there is reason to hope that the period of readjustment is passing and that better times are ahead." Sir Frederick said in Vancouver last week. "The farmers east and west were hard hit by post-war devaluation, but there are distinct signs of recovery and an enlarged buying power of the agricultural community, with all-round benefit to trade. This is particularly noticeable in the Prairie Provinces, which, as a result of better crops and better prices, give every evidence of entering upon a new period of prosperity.

"Taken all in all, Canada has no reason to be dissatisfied with its prospects, especially when compared with other countries. We have a larger per capita trade than any other country in the world, and we are only at the beginning of the exploitation of our resources."

B.C. STOCKBREEDERS PROPOSE CATTLE POOL

Committee Appointed to Investigate Is Convinced by Observing Alberta Pool Operations

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—At a meeting of the executive of the British Columbia Stockbreeders' Association held here the committee appointed to investigate the question of the co-operative marketing of livestock made its report.

From personal observations of the operations of the Alberta cattle pool, the committee reported that it could devise a suitable marketing scheme for this Province. This will be made public at a general meeting of the stockmen during the Kamloops fair, September 29 to October 1.

QUEBEC HOME WILL BE BURIAL PLACE OF LATE MINISTER

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.—Arrangements for the funeral of Hon. George H. Boivin, who died in hospital here this afternoon following an operation for appendicitis, had not been completed tonight, but it was announced that the body would be taken to Granby, Que., tomorrow. The body of the former minister will be taken by train to his home in Shefford constituency, which he had represented in the House of Commons since 1911, by his widow and Mr. James A. Flaherty, Supreme Knight of the Knights of Columbus. The daughter and two sons of Mr. Boivin will return to Canada by automobile. Mr. Boivin had come to Philadelphia to attend the annual convention of the Knights of Columbus.

MR. M'GEER HAS BEEN NOMINATED

NORTH VANCOUVER WILL SEE CONTEST BETWEEN GEN. McRAE AND LAWYER

Defeated in Vancouver Centre at Last Election, Mr. McGeer Again Seeks Election

NORTH VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—G. G. McGeer, K.C., freight rates counsel for the British Columbia Government, who unsuccessfully contested Vancouver Centre in the last Federal election, was nominated at a Liberal convention here tonight to oppose General A. D. McRae, Conservative nominee, in the forthcoming election.

He defeated Rev. P. C. Parker, of Gibson's Landing, for the nomination, after J. J. Dutton, West Vancouver, and Ian Mackenzie, M.L.A., other nominees, had withdrawn their names.

Mr. McGeer made it clear that he would again seek election on a railway rates issue. He outlined a platform in a prenomination speech, the first plank of which was the "removal of discrimination in railway costs in Western Canada" and the establishment of terminal rates for North Vancouver on the same basis as for Vancouver.

NEW BUILDING TO HOUSE PRINTERY

Plan to Remove King's Printer to Block at the Corner of Government and Superior Streets

TO OCCUPY SITE OF PIONEER RESIDENCE

Change Would Permit Mines Branch Being Centralized in Present West Wing of Parliament Buildings

THE Provincial Government has under consideration the erection of a three-story concrete building on the southwest corner of Government and Superior Streets. The purpose of this structure is to provide accommodation for the printing offices of the King's Printer.

When this building has been erected the intention is to remove the printing office from the present location in the west wing to the new premises and thus make room in the block vacated for some of the departments of government that are now crowded in the present buildings. The Department of Mines will find in the present printing offices quarters better suited to the purposes of this part of the government work.

To Concentrate

At present the offices falling under the charge of the Minister of Mines are scattered in various parts of the buildings and it is felt that with the shifting of the King's Printer from the location now occupied, the Mines Department could be centralized in all its divisions, together with the mineral museum.

When the property, which is to be improved, was acquired under a former government it was announced that it would be improved in conformity with the general character of the imposing pile which occupies Parliament Square.

More Accommodation Wanted

The government staff in the Parliament Buildings has been largely increased within later years and there has been a constant feeling that more accommodation must be found to cope with this situation created.

Before the work is undertaken it will be necessary to provide for a vote in the next estimates, covering the undertaking.

Agreement Is Formed Between Japan and German Dye Industry

TOKIO, Aug. 7.—The Foreign Office issued a statement today saying that Japan has formed an agreement with the German dye industry whereby a committee will be appointed to decide all questions arising in connection with the importation of dye stuffs. This is with a view to insuring fair treatment to both governments. It is stated that the agreement makes possible a commercial treaty soon between the two countries.

G.T.P. DEBENTURES IMPROVE ON MARKET

Rise in Price Said to Be Due to Cable From Canada Indicating Prospect of Settlement

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The Daily Graphic understands that the recent rise in Grand Trunk Pacific debentures was due to the receipt of a cable from Canada stating that representatives were sent to Britain to arrange an amicable settlement. The change of attitude, the paper states, was due to the intervention of Mr. Reginald McKenna, chairman of the London City and Midland Bank, and former Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was invited by important Canadian interests to express an opinion on the situation.

CITY WILL SEEK COURT INJUNCTION

WILL ENDEAVOR TO RESTRAIN MR. BELL FROM REOPENING WATERWORKS DISPUTE

Application by Victoria in Chambers Thursday Next—Right of Mr. Bell to Take Part Challenged

The City of Victoria, through Mr. H. A. Maclean, K.C., special counsel, and City Solicitor H. S. Pringle, will ask for an injunction on Thursday morning next in Supreme Court Chambers, restraining Mr. W. Wentworth Bell, independent engineer, from proceeding with an inquiry into matters arising out of the contract between the Corporation of Victoria and the Westholme Lumber Company, Limited, for the construction of the Sooke waterworks system.

Announcement of the city's action was made at the City Hall yesterday morning. Mr. Bell will be served with a notice of motion.

Mr. Bell proposed to proceed with a reopening of the dispute on Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock, at the Courthouse, but whether this session will be held, in view of the latest development, remains to be seen.

The origin of the Westholme-Victoria dispute goes back to the construction of the Sooke Lake waterworks system, in which the Westholme Lumber Company were the contractors. The city, towards the close of the operations, expressed dissatisfaction with the work. From the Supreme Court the action went to the British Columbia Court of Appeal and from there to the Privy Council. Once more the litigation was started on a second round of the courts.

Prior to Mr. Bell holding a session of inquiry on July 23, the City of Victoria issued a writ of summons against Mr. Bell, questioning his right to reopen the Westholme-Victoria dispute. Mr. Bell adjourned the inquiry to obtain legal advice himself concerning his course in the matter. He says that he has since been advised that it is his duty to proceed with an inquiry until various matters in the dispute have been determined.

Kitwanga Flags Fly Half-Mast for Chief

HAZELTON, B.C., Aug. 7.—Flags at Kitwanga, a village near here, were flown at half-mast today in respect for the passing of Jim Laknitz, one of the principal chiefs of the Gitksan tribe of Indians, who died last night. He took a prominent part in assisting in the Government preservation of totem poles by placing his own at the disposal of the officials before any other Indians of the district had consented to do so.

COLDSTREAM GUARDS HONOR WAR HEROES

Wreath Laid on Cenotaph—Thousands Gather to Witness Ceremony in Victory Square

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—Several thousand people gathered in Victory Square shortly before noon today when His Majesty's Coldstream Band honored the memory of Vancouver's heroes by placing a wreath on the cenotaph.

While the band stood at attention in front of the memorial, Lieut. Robert G. Evans, officer in charge, stepped forward and, saluting, placed a large wreath on the base of the cenotaph. As the officer retired the roll of the drums echoed over the heads of the silent crowd and a moment later the band commenced the "Dead March" in "Saul."

Mayor L. D. Taylor and Mr. J. K. Matheson, exhibition manager, thanked Lieut. Evans on behalf of the city.

Will Clean Service From Top to Bottom States Mr. Stevens

Auditors and Experts Are to Go Over Department of Customs Thoroughly, Looking to Its Complete Reorganization—Country Wants It Cleaned Up, He Says, and Government Is Going to Do It

"Simple Honesty in Public Life Is One Real Issue in This Campaign"

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—The Vancouver Province carries the following dispatch from Winnipeg today: "It is our intention to have the Customs service thoroughly cleaned from top to bottom," said Hon. Mr. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Customs, who passed through this city on Friday en route west. The Centre Vancouver candidate will rest at Jasper Park for a few days before going on to Vancouver, where he will arrive on Tuesday evening.

Complete Reorganization

"We have just engaged Clarkson, Gordon & Dilworth, auditors and chartered accountants, and they will commence at headquarters and go thoroughly through the Department, looking to its complete reorganization," said Mr. Stevens.

"With them in their work will be associated Mr. George Taylor, assistant deputy Minister of Customs; Chief Inspector Busby; Dr. W. J. Roche, chairman of the Civil Service Commission; George Gonthier, auditor general, and Mr. R. W. Breadner, of the Income Tax Department.

"These men are of the best in their respective departments, and will co-operate in every way with the auditors in the reorganization of the department, until they bring this most important public service back to the point of efficiency required in Canada.

Thorough Clean-Up

"The investigation into the affairs of the department will be carried on by Sir Francois Lemieux most searchingly. Sir Henry Drayton told me just before I left Ottawa that the only instructions given by the Government were to make the investigation as complete and as sweeping as it is possible to have it.

"Sir Francois Lemieux has a clear warrant to do whatever he sees fit with no restrictions whatever. He understands this and also that he will receive every co-operation and assistance from the Government. We want the work done so thoroughly that it will not be necessary to do it again. We believe the people of Canada want the Customs mess cleared up and we are going to do the job as it should be done."

Mr. Stevens' Health

Mr. Stevens still shows the effects of his recent illness.

"I am feeling better," he said, "but am not yet up to par, by any means. I intend to rest for a few days in Jasper, and then I shall go on to my home and get into the fight in Vancouver Centre. I expect to win, but I also realize that I have work to do, for I am up against a strong man in Mr. Donaghy, who is an indefatigable worker."

Election Outlook

Mr. Stevens expressed his pleasure with the outlook for the Conservative Party in the election campaign. "Things look immeasurably better than last year," he said. "Reports I receive are that we will do as well or better in Ontario than we did last election. In the Maritimes we will at least hold our own and even gain Gloucester, where Hon. P. J. Veniot, ex-Premier of New Brunswick, will carry the banner of the Liberal Party, Mr. Robichaud retiring after the revelations in the Moses Aziz case. We shall also do better in Quebec Province and in the West."

Mr. Stevens was pleased by the nomination of Mr. J. A. Banfield as Conservative candidate in North Centre, Winnipeg.

Speaking of election issues, Mr. Stevens said:

"One real issue in this campaign is simple honesty in public life. The Customs Department has been debauched and degraded through laxity on part of its administrators and it is our intention to have the service thoroughly cleaned to the bottom."

Prime Minister Is To Address Open Air Meeting Here

AWAITING only the final confirmation of plans, it appears altogether likely that Right Hon. Arthur Meighen will be in this city on Tuesday, August 17. His stay will be a very brief one, as he will leave again at 2 o'clock in the afternoon by steamer for Vancouver. Through the courtesy of Premier Oliver it has been arranged that the Prime Minister of the Dominion will speak to the electorate from the steps of the Parliament Buildings. This meeting will be set for some time between 12 noon and 2 o'clock, which will permit Mr. Meighen to proceed directly from the Buildings to the steamer.

The altered plans of the itinerary of Mr. Meighen, as now arranged, calls for his arrival from Edmonton in Prince Rupert on Saturday, August 14. Speaking there that evening he will leave for the south the same night, reaching Vancouver on Monday morning, and will speak at an afternoon meeting in New Westminster, after which he will proceed by launch to Royston, in Comox-Alberni riding, and speak there that night.

The following afternoon he will motor to Victoria to speak here before leaving in the afternoon for Vancouver, where he will address a meeting on Tuesday evening.

PLAGUE RAVAGES SHANGHAI CITY

WITH WEIRD CEREMONIALS, CHINESE STRIVE TO APPEASE DRAGON KING

More Than 1,000 Dying Every Day—Epidemic Is Due to Unsanitary Conditions and Heat

SHANGHAI, Aug. 7.—With weird ceremonials in their temples to appease the dragon king, the Chinese are attempting to halt the cholera epidemic which is daily causing more than one thousand deaths in the native sections of Shanghai and in the Pootung district, across the river.

Foreigners, living in concession districts of Shanghai, as modern as European or American cities, have been almost immune from the scourge, only two or three of their number having died.

The Chinese are praying to the dragon king to send rain to relieve the heat which is drying streams and parching rice fields. Their officials admit their inability to cope with the disease, although they are establishing many hospitals, and otherwise endeavoring to relieve the sufferers of the highly fatal epidemic.

Thousands of natives crowd the hospitals, which are almost helpless, their facilities being utterly inadequate. Only a few cases can be treated, thousands dying in hovels without medical attention.

Only narrow streets separate the foreign concessions, with their 20,000 foreigners, of whom more than 10,000 are Japanese, from the densely crowded antiquated Chinese city. The foreign districts are clean and sanitary, well equipped under white jurisdiction to care for their inhabitants.

The mortality is heavy in the native city and in the Pootung district, a million and a half Chinese being huddled in unsanitary buildings. Foreign physicians and others are aiding the Chinese sufferers.

AXES USED FREELY IN RAIDING GAMBLERS

Paraphernalia Removed If Loose, Otherwise Smashed—New Police Order in Vancouver

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—A police order that is intended to make the operation of lotteries more difficult has become effective. Acting on this order, Acting Inspector McLaughlin and his men are using axes freely in entering all places that have been previously raided and convictions registered against them, and are destroying all paraphernalia found.

This afternoon premises at 95 Powell Street were raided, four men arrested on gaming charges, all loose paraphernalia removed, and the rest smashed with axes and hammers.

Similar action was taken Friday night at 828 Main Street, 212 Georgia Street East, and 248 Union Street.

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—Further reports of thefts are being made to the police by despoiled citizens. That he engaged in a friendly wrestling bout with a stranger on Cordova Street and later missed two notes for $600 and $140, and a cheque for $75, was the report of C. W. Reid. Several thefts of a similar nature have occurred during the past week.

Hon. Dr. S. F. Tolmie Will Address Picnic Gathering

Monster Celebration at Willows Park on Wednesday Will Give Citizens Opportunity to Hear Issues of Campaign—Sports Programme

ON Wednesday of this week the Conservatives hold their annual picnic at the Willows Park. The event will afford the opportunity for the supporters of Hon. S. F. Tolmie to hear directly from him on the questions at issue in the Dominion campaign. In the past these picnics have been very attractive and as many as 5,000 or 6,000 have gathered for the afternoon's enjoyment and recreation. The Dominion election, now fast approaching, adds to the interest of the event this year and preparations are being made for a record-breaking picnic.

The event opens at the grounds at 1:30 in the afternoon, and the programme prepared promises to carry it until well into the evening.

Dr. Tolmie's Visit

The picnic affords the opportunity for Hon. S. F. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture, to meet his constituents for the first time since last Fall. In the arrangements for the day it has been provided that the chance will be afforded Dr. Tolmie and Mr. C. H. Dickie, Conservative candidate for Nanaimo, to address the gathering on Dominion politics. The speaking will begin at 5 o'clock in the evening from a platform to be erected for the purpose.

A band will be present and provide a programme of music during the afternoon. On the lower part of the ground, where they can be watched from the higher elevation without inconvenience, a series of athletic events will be carried on. There will also be on the grounds amusements for those who wish to take part in them, including such things as cocoanut throwing and guessing contests as to the number of beans in a retainer. In this latter test a ton of coal will be given for the nearest approach to the number, while the second prize will consist of a cord of

New Lutheran Pastor to Be Installed Today

This morning, the Rev. F. Theuer is to be installed as pastor of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church at the corner of Princess Avenue and Chambers Street. The installation service is to be conducted by the Rev. E. R. Pfluger, and will be of exceptional interest, as it is more than a year that this congregation has been without a regular pastor, the vacancy occurring on the resignation of the Rev. R. F. Kibler to go to Baker, Oregon. Mr. Theuer arrived yesterday, motoring here from Salem with his brother and father.

The congregation will give a picnic and reception for their new pastor on Saturday, August 21, at the Gorge (City) Park.

DR. TOLMIE WILL ARRIVE MONDAY

INFORMAL RECEPTION WILL BE TENDERED MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Conservatives Will Again Nominate Popular Victorian for Representative at Ottawa

Hon. S. F. Tolmie, who will arrive home tomorrow after an absence of about eight months from the city, is to be accorded a warm welcome by his supporters. He is to arrive on the afternoon steamer at 2:30 o'clock from Vancouver, and will be met by a large delegation of his friends and political supporters. Headed by the Boys' Pipe Band, a procession will be formed at the wharf, and the Minister of Agriculture will be escorted to the Conservative Rooms in the Campbell Building, where he will be welcomed after a strenuous term of public duty.

The reception to be accorded Dr. Tolmie will not be formal in its character. He will not be asked on the occasion to go fully into matters political, as the opportunity will be afforded him to do this before a larger gathering on Wednesday afternoon, when he will meet his supporters at the Conservative picnic.

Leaving here in November of last year, he has not had the opportunity to come back to the city during the whole of the intervening time. Called to Ottawa to consult with the leaders of the party, he plunged into a very strenuous session of the House, which finally resulted in the taking over of power by Mr. Meighen, and the selection of Dr. Tolmie for his former portfolio in the newly formed cabinet.

Repeatedly he has endeavored to reach his home city since that, but has been prevented by reason of public business.

Tomorrow evening the delegatee to the nominating convention meet in the party quarters, when the formal selection of a candidate will take place, with no doubt existing as to the Minister being the unanimous choice.

CARAVAN LURES TO OPEN ROAD

CATALINA MOTORISTS IN CAMP AT CURTIS POINT HAVE REAL HOME ON WHEELS

Spaciousness Has Been Secured by Compact Arrangement of Domestic Details

From time to time wealthy motorists of leisure spend large sums on fitting up caravans of luxurious appointments for the purpose of surrendering to the lure of the open road.

But for an example of efficiency without waste, comfort without extravagance, convenience without ugliness, there is to be seen now at the Curtis Point Automobile Camp an example of the ideal tourist caravan, in which Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Stamford, of Catalina, California, are touring British Columbia.

Mr. Stamford sat on the comfortable full-sized bed at the rear, the "house" being built on a Reo speed wagon, with special absorbers, and told a representative of The Colonist yesterday how they had traveled 20,000 miles in the structure, which has every convenience for practising domestic arts. Mrs. Stamford showed how the utensils were stowed away when not in use, and how the wardrobes kept the interior tidy. The special screens, hangings, and other fittings proclaimed the presence of a feminine mind in designing the camp home, while the thoroughness of the walls and doors, with thief-defying locks showed that the motorists are ready to enter any class of country, often infested by prowlers of the broad highway. In California, Mrs. Stamford said the motorist had to be absolutely hard-hearted, and refuse rides owing to the numerous cases where bandits had begged a ride and then overpowered the occupants, knocking them unconscious and leaving them on the roadside while stealing the cars.

The Stamfords have wandered the highways and byways of Western America in this caravan, meeting with the usual adventures which befall long-distance motorists. They came this year to Vancouver, leaving the car there while they cruised to Alaska, and then crossed on their return to the Island, going as far north as Campbell River.

The investment in the car represents about $3,000. Their cooking, heating and lighting is all self-contained, so that on arrival at the place of encampment is ready for a meal.

CHILDREN FAIL TO RETURN TO MOTHER

It Is Uncertain Whether They Have Met With Serious Accident or Are Running Wild

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 7.—Alexander and Margaret Wishart, aged fourteen and sixteen respectively, who were reported missing when they failed to return home from the Vancouver Exhibition Friday night, are said to have been seen at the fair today.

Police are now seeking them.

"It's this terrible way of living," said their mother, Mrs. J. Wishart, in commenting on their disappearance. "I was raised in the Old Country, where we believe home is the place to live, and here, it is automobiles, and jazz and out all night, until I'm crazy over what's going to become of my children."

THEATRE MANAGER RETURNS TO CITY

PARLEY LAYS PLANS FOR FINE PICTURES TO BE SHOWN IN FALL SEASON

Famous Players Canadian Corporation Managers Are Delighted With Calgary Conference

Victoria is to have an unusually attractive programme for the theatre-going public during the Autumn and Winter, according to Mr. J. M. Robertson, manager of the Dominion Theatre, who returned yesterday afternoon from Calgary, where he attended the first convention of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd. The Western division managers met at the Palliser Hotel on August 3, 4 and 5, Mr. Clarence Robson, general manager of the Eastern division, being among those who attended. Other managers included Mr. H. M. Thomas, of Winnipeg, Western division manager in charge of the convention, and Mr. J. R. Muir, of Vancouver, one of the Western directors.

The subject of theatre management was discussed at great length, largely from the angle of giving the best service to the theatre-going public. "Theatre routine has come to be a matter of supreme importance," said Mr. Robertson to a representative of The Colonist last evening, and "it is a well known fact among theatre managers that service ranks next in importance to entertainment."

The matter of arranging the picture programme for the Fall and Winter was discussed by the convention and the public will welcome the news that among the Famous Players group will be a new Harold Lloyd film, the title of which has not been disclosed. A James Cruze production, "Old Ironsides," is among the most outstanding; there will be D. W. Griffiths' "Sorrows of Satan," Erich von Stromheim's "The Wedding March," Old Heidelberg," "Mare Nostrum," and others.

A British-made film, equal to any American production, is to be shown, "Nell Gwyn," starring Lilian Gish, has been running in New York and drawing capacity houses, and this picture will undoubtedly have a great success in Victoria. Charlie Chaplin, in "The Circus" is something to be looked forward to, and "it is the general consensus of opinion that this feature programme will be the best yet," added Mr. Robertson.

SEARCH IS MADE ON NORWAY COAST

been much strengthened by information supplied me through a Scandinavian doctor, who, from local knowledge, confirmed these reports with the further statement that it was "A high military officer from the Hampshire." Before taking any further action I compiled a list of the graves of British soldiers, sailors and mercantile marine men in Scandinavia. I found several hundred. About half of these had never been identified and I can now say that in a number of instances no identification has ever been attempted.

The graves fall into three descriptions—those actually identified and marked by gravestones; those with the vague inscription, "Known Unto God," and those bearing a little piece of wood or stone as a marker. Some time ago a systematic search was made along the coast to find whether any of the unidentified bodies bore a resemblance to Kitchener.

Sufficient evidence was forthcoming to show that such a body had been discovered by a fisherman who had taken part of the clothing and hung it in his hut.

Statements of Two Men

With these things in mind I set out for Norway. In the quest I received invaluable assistance from two of the men who found the body and gave it temporary burial beneath the stones of the shore, whence it was afterwards transferred in a wooden casket to the cemetery. These men have signed their names to statements for me. The grave had neither cross nor stone to mark it. The substance of the long conversation which held with the men, L. Johansen and H. Iversen, was that during the war they had occasionally found bodies which had been washed up on the shore of Southwestern Norway. South of Egersund they found the body of a man lying with his head toward the sea and his legs up toward the cliffs. He was a tall man, terribly bruised about the head. His uniform was much torn and Johansen, who saved a piece of it, said that it was that of a very high officer. Johansen also saved a ribbon, but had thrown both away before I went.

Evidence Alleged

I am depending upon very clear marks of identification discovered when I examined the body. They are as follows:

The fine stature; the mark of an old wound on the skull which corresponds with one Kitchener was known to have received; his dental work which corresponds with the description of Kitchener's dentist. In certain places there were scraps of fabric still clinging to the body with braid, ribbon, etc., which check with the description of Kitchener's tailor.

Upon the arrival of the body today in London, it will be conveyed to a suitable place. I shall immediately notify the representatives of the British Government that the remains of Kitchener are in my possession and at their disposal. The remains can be those of no one other high officer on the Hampshire. I have determined that by elimination. The only member of Kitchener's staff who was not found and buried was Mr. Leslie Robertson—a much shorter and smaller man than the Field Marshal.

NOTE: For three years, Frank Power, a free lance journalist, working with The Referee, a London Sunday newspaper, has been attempting to discover the body of Horatio Herbert Kitchener, British Field Marshal, who went down with the cruiser Hampshire, June 5, 1916. The Hampshire was supposed to have encountered a German mine or torpedo three hours after she left her anchorage in Scapa Flow, Orkney Islands, for Archangel, Russia. Most of her crew of 655 men shared Kitchener's fate. In the foregoing article Power describes what he asserts is the successful conclusion of his search.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN HAS B.C. SUPPLEMENT

Splendidly Illustrated Forty-Page Magazine Issue Furnishes Comprehensive Information

With the issuing of special British Columbia supplement, which bears the date of Thursday, July 22, The Manchester Guardian places another part of the Empire under a deep obligation to this well known English journal.

This forty-page supplement, copies of which are just arriving in Victoria by the last mails, is a comprehensive survey of British Columbia activities, mining, agriculture, timber, fishing, and the shipping services and other interests which are incidental to these. The cover-design is a conventionalized panorama illustrating the forests and fishing, with the B.C. coat-of-arms surmounting a circular decorative map of the Province.

The foreword is by the Hon. R. Randolph Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and in the succeeding pages there are articles by the Premier, by two or three of the Provincial Cabinet ministers, members of special commissions, and others who were specially invited to contribute matter on their special subjects. "The Present Position and Outlook," by the Hon. John Oliver; the "Mining Industry," by the Hon. Wm. Sloan, Minister of Mines; "The Value of Water Resources," by Mr. E. A. Cleveland, chief commissioner of Greater Vancouver water district; "Fruit Stock and Dairy Farming," by the Hon. E. D. Barrow; "Harvests of Rivers and Sea," by Mr. John Peake Babcock, assistant commissioner of fisheries for British Columbia; "Fifty Years' Progress in Canning" (with the slogan, "Look for Canada on the Lid"), by Mr. Hugh Dalton, of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association; "Vancouver," by Louis D. Taylor, mayor of Vancouver; "The Port of Vancouver," by Col. Guy H. Kirkpatrick, of the Vancouver Harbor Commissioners; "Port of Victoria," by Mr. Frank Giolma; "Port of New Westminster," by Mr. F. J. Coulthard, New Westminster harbor commissioner; "Pulp and Paper Expansion," by Mr. George F. Whalen; "Hunting and Fishing—A Paradise for Sportsmen," by Mr. Bryan Williams; "Through the Canadian Rockies," by Mr. E. H. Banks; "The Choice of a Mining Share," by General R. P. Clark; "Financial Position of the Province," from the Minister of Finance; "Investment and Trade Opportunities," from "The City Staff," and "Geological Features of British Columbia," by Dr. V. Dolmage, geologist in charge, British Columbia office of the Geological Survey of Canada.

Lest it be thought that Victoria, the capital of the Province, has been overlooked, it should be stated that the first page in the supplement is entirely devoted to this. The matter is succinct, and has evidently been supplied by the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau.

Excellently Illustrated

The illustrations throughout this supplement are excellent, and will undoubtedly assist the reader unacquainted with British Columbia to visualize the conditions about which he is reading. Victoria, the capital, is illustrated with the fine view across the Causeway, from the postoffice; by a glimpse of Douglas Street which shows the Bank of Montreal, Sayward Building, the B.C. Permanent Loan Building, and part of the Inner Harbor. Elsewhere, also, there are shown the new Government drydock at Esquimalt, and the Parliament Buildings.

The rest of the Province and various industries are also well pictured. Cattle in the South Bulkley Valley illustrated Mr. Barrow's article on agriculture; and the article on pulp and paper is illustrated with a fine picture of standing timber. There are alluring pictures of the Okanagan Valley. A very good map of the Province is included.

Contributors

The Lieutenant-Governor's foreword, with an inset photograph of His Honor, is in itself a comprehensive history of British Columbia, and is written with a tone of enthusiasm which is all-convincing as to the writer's faith in the Province's future.

"With its charm of climate and scenery, its rugged mountains and fertile valleys, it increasingly continues to attract not alone the tourist and sportsman or the man of means, whose temporary visit is often but the prelude to permanent abode; but the man and woman who, whilst willing to work hard, desires to make a home amidst beautiful surroundings. It is this type of man and to this type of woman that British Columbia looks for its future progress, and to whom it holds out its warmest welcome," writes His Honor.

Premier's Praise

Premier Oliver is equally optimistic: "Marvellous as has been the progress made of recent years by California and her sister States on the Pacific, there appears to be no good reason why British Columbia, with resources as yet barely touched, should not excel them in the years to come. A country difficult of development is often the best when subdued. To that end we welcome capital, and above all that patient, pioneering labor that bridges the streams, makes highways through the hills, and converts the swamp into smiling orchards and fertile fields."

New York Preacher Lauds British Ideals

LONDON—Aug. 7.—Speaking on the world's need of English ideals, the Rev. H. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, New York, who is on a visit to this country at the invitation of the British section of the Committee on Interchange of Preachers between Great Britain and the United States, delivered a sermon in Westminster Abbey at the special service for the biennial conference of the Young Women's Christian Association of Great Britain.

Dr. Bowie declared that the world could not afford to lose any part of the old greatness of England. "It needs the strength of British conviction, of ordered liberty; the British sense of social justice; the patient British leadership toward world co-operation and world peace," he said.

The great gathering of the women of Great Britain, affiliated with the women of all lands present in the Abbey, he said, symbolized the influences which could most surely preserve the stalwart spirit of England at home and the helpfulness of her leadership abroad. "Youth unconsecrated," Dr. Bowie said, "may degenerate into mere cynical criticism of a world which it does nothing to help, but youth and the ideal of Christ can face old evils of hatred and war with a faith which destroys them."

A child recently entered a shop and asked for a penny packet of bird seed. The shopman replied that he had only "tuppenny" packets. "Who is it for, my dear, your mother?"

"No," said the child; "it's for the bird."

MR. T. B. MACAULAY IS BACK IN MONTREAL

President of Sun Life Assurance Company Greatly Impressed With Optimism of Pacific Coast

MONTREAL, Aug. 7.—Mr. T. B. Macaulay, president of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, has returned to the city from a five-weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast.

"The general impression seems to be," said Mr. Macaulay, "that the representation to be returned at the next election will not differ in character very much from that of the last election. There is a strong feeling, however, that the condition was unsatisfactory."

Asked what his strongest impression of the West was, Mr. Macaulay said that it was the optimism of the people. "They are looking forward to an abundant crop," he proceeded. "Last year's crop did a great deal to put the farmers on their feet, and it is hoped that this year's crop will bring real prosperity.

Great Optimism in B. C.

"In British Columbia there is great optimism. Vancouver is developing into a great seaport. More and more she is becoming a shipping point for grain from Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the exports to Asia are rapidly increasing."

Prospects are that a section in Alberta is going to become a great oil field, said Mr. Macaulay, the supplies of which, it is hoped will be sufficient to meet the requirements of Western Canada.

"The most important field," he continued, "is forty-two miles southwest of Calgary. A few years ago there was a boom there, but it fizzled out, small quantities of oil only being obtained from a number of the wells. The Imperial Oil Company, however, went on drilling, and on going deeper into the earth discovered a wonderful supply of both oil and gas. More interesting and more important is the fact that it is not ordinary oil, but is equivalent to a very high grade of gasoline."

Wild Cat Schemes

Mr. Macaulay added a word of warning to Easterners about investing their money in wild cat oil schemes. Those on the inside who know what they are doing may make money, but those who invest as the result of circulars are exceedingly likely to lose their money, he stated.

Mr. Macaulay went west primarily to attend the convention of western representatives of the Sun Life Assurance Company in Victoria. Tribute was paid the Canadian Pacific Railway for their support. The C.P.R. officials were said to have been "courteous and co-operation personified in trying to do everything possible for the comfort, convenience and pleasure of everyone attending the convention."

EXTENSION OF LIFE SHOWN BY RECORDS

Three Score and Ten Years No Longer Regarded as Mark of Declining Age

Evidence to show that three score years and ten no longer stands as a note for apprehension in the vale of declining years and that the grand climacteric of many seasoned individuals comes near, and even after, the century mark, is found in late stories of venerable lessees of life.

The "grand old man" of this and that usually is given prominence wherever he appears and is viewed as much by the idly curious as the friendly interested, for "the hoary head is a crown of glory." Wonder is often expressed at such prolongation of life; it is usually regarded as phenomenal and a matter of good fortune, or ill, as the case may be, although eminent medical men declare that the extension of human life is rapidly being accomplished. Fifteen years have been added to the average life in several countries in the last seventy-five years, it is said, and during the last twenty years the gain in length of life has been greater than in the previous fifty years.

According to Dr. Louis I. Dublin, statistician of the Meropolitan Life Insurance Company, persons sixty-five years of age and over are rapidly increasing in number in the United States and there are now on this continent 5,500,000 people who may be classed as aged persons.

Britain's "Grand Old" Admiral

Britain's oldest Admiral and the only living naval officer born in the reign of William IV observed his ninetieth birthday by attending the recent races at Ascot. He is Admiral Sir Edmund Fremantle and entered the navy in 1849, when it consisted mainly of sailing vessels. Sir George W. A. Higginson, who celebrated his hundredth birthday last June, is the oldest British general alive, having joined the Grenadier Guards eighty-one years ago. He served during the Crimean War and is the author of "Seventy-One Years of a Guardman's Life."

A passenger on the first Erie Railroad train who lived to read the news of the first airplane's flight over the North Pole is Mrs. Louisa Clark Hunter, of Highland Mills, N.Y., who celebrated her ninety-ninth birthday on last June 4. The story of a commuter, ninety-four years of age, who has traveled each day into Boston from an outlying district for the past forty years was recently reported. Besides attending to daily business, this nonogenarian finds time to cultivate a spacious flower garden. Roses are his hobby.

Another story, from Connecticut, told of the oldest Mason in that State who is in the habit of taking airplane rides. He lately celebrated his 101st birthday and announced that he never smoked until he was eighty and then started with a cigarette. Patrick Murphy, 105 years old, reputed to be the oldest member of the Knights of Columbus in the United States and given the title of Colorado's oldest citizen, died on July 4, this year. He was born in Limerick, Ireland, in 1821. On his 102nd birthday he climbed more than two-thirds of the way up Pikea Peak, despite ice and snow, and was dissuaded from completing his climb only by the entreaties of friends who accompanied him.

"A Cigar a Day"

"A cigar a day will keep the doctor away," said Bernhard Berendt, Berlin's oldest resident, who lately entered his 105th year. He allows an exception to the rule on birthdays, when he smokes "two good black stogies." Berendt is in perfect health, according to reports. He has vivid recollections of political events as far back as 1848, when during the revolution he was a member of the Prussian Guards.

Superannuation is found among women as much as men and climatic conditions have no effect on the "sere and yellow leaf," it seems. From the perennially balmy air of Kentucky came the news only recently of a woman who, according to the best records, was 117 years when she died on last June 2. She retained her faculties to an unusual degree and was survived by four generations. The only other person in Kentucky ever to surpass her age was John Snell, who died three years ago, if the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, at the age of 134. And from one village in the extreme North came the story of a woman who churned butter in an old-fashioned earthenware churn on her 100th birthday. She hadn't been away from the village in the last fifty years.

The cobwebs of antiquity hang unmolested about the hoard heads of old darkies, too. George Tombs, 100 years old, from the fields of cotton visited his son in New York a little while ago. All his faculties, at the time, were unimpaired, except for his eyesight. He had all his teeth, except one, which was missing from his upper jaw. Eliza Allen, who was a middle-aged negro "mammy" on a Kentucky plantation before the Civil War, died at the home of her daughter in Los Angeles lately. According to the only figures obtainable, she was born 126 years ago near Louisville.

Many people who went to school would have a hard time proving it.

Old Gent: "How can you beg here? You may be arrested for it."

Blind and Lame Beggar: "If I see a policeman I run away!"—Buen Humor, Madrid.

FISH PRESERVATIVE RETAINS FLAVOR

Chemists Discover Method of Keeping Sea Foods for Indefinite Periods With Original Flavor

Fish chemists have been endeavoring for years to discover a method of preserving many kinds of fish for indefinite periods while retaining their original flavor and nutritive values. A plan has recently been hit upon that, it is claimed, makes it possible to keep fish in perfect condition for two years, laboratory tests at Columbia University being advanced to establish this fact. People living far inland may soon know for the first time the true flavor of many varieties of fish.

Fish are most plentiful in the Summer months, yet the greatest demand comes in the Winter months. By preserving fish when the catches are heaviest a great economy can be effected.

Analysis has revealed the fact that fish are subject to two distinct forms of decomposition. One of these—in its earlier stages, at least—creates a so-called "fishy" flavor, which in some cases does not destroy food value. The second form is putrefaction. Fish chemists have been searching for some method that will preserve the most delicate fish foods from both these forms of decay. The common method is freezing. By this means fish may be kept from decomposition for long periods, though the flavor suffers or is entirely lost.

It has been found that during the process of freezing large crystals are formed. These puncture the delicate tissues, permitting certain valuable liquids to escape. Chemists now believe they can freeze fish with "dry ice" in such a way that the most delicate flavor may be retained. This is accomplished by first giving the fish brine baths and then freezing it quickly at low temperatures. The fish is not permitted to come in contact with any metal but aluminum.

After freezing the fish is wrapped in parchment paper; this virtually amounts to sealing it hermetically. Fish thus treated may be packed in refrigerator cars and shipped, if necessary, across the continent.

Residents of the Middle West may now enjoy, it is said, such highly perishable fish foods as lobster, crab, oysters and scallops as do people living on the seacoast. Persons blindfolded have been asked to taste, alternately, fresh fish and fish prepared by the new method. They were unable to tell which was which.

DEMAND FOR WINTER HOMES IN CITY MORE THAN A MONTH EARLY

Inquiries about Winter homes in Victoria are pouring in from all sides more than a month ahead of time, particularly from the Middle West, reports the Publicity Bureau, which is kept busy answering these demands in the midst of its Summer season.

The rush of inquiries for Winter accommodation does not usually commence until mid-September, and even then is not very pressing until later in the season.

It is expected by the Publicity Bureau that the cold weather on the Prairies will bring more people to Victoria this Winter than have ever been known to come.

Alleged Bootleggers Caught After Chase

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 7.—When he attempted to place three men under arrest for alleged bootlegging activities in conection with the province-wide investigation now being conducted, Provincial Officer L. G. Fleming, Toronto, stationed at London, on special duty, was battered into insensibility and left lying on the road near Park Hill late yesterday.

The alleged assailants were captured after a thrilling chase. Donald McKinnon, twenty-four; John McKinnon, twenty-six, and Harry McKinnon, thirty-nine, all of Park Hill, Middlesex County, were arrested. They are held in jail, charged with assault. The men are brothers.

A GREAT BANKER

No name stands out more prominently in the history of Canadian banking institutions than that of Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor who will be a visitor in Victoria this week-end. Intensely practical in the application of his financial ability, which is of a commanding order, he is possessed as well of high ideals. He carries on with those ideals always dominating his purposes in life. Sir Frederick was a tower of strength to Canada during the critical war years when the maintenance of credit was so imperative. He had charge of the Government's financial operations in London and in the pursuit of these he consolidated and enhanced a reputation for banking administration previously well established during his years as head of the Bank of Montreal's interests in London. In a large sense, and in a sense which was so desirable for the successful prosecution of the war, no one in this country did more or better work than Sir Frederick.

He was responsible to a substantial degree for insuring the financial help of Canada in the harvesting of her crops, in stimulating the placing in Canada of munition orders for Britain and her Allies, and, generally speaking, in the development of credit where it was needed for the major operations of the war, so far as this country could help in that respect. Sir Frederick's attitude was well defined at the time the War Revenue Act was passed in 1915, a measure which taxed the note circulation of the banks. He had to admit that such taxation came as a shock and that it would be felt by the banks in their efforts to maintain both strength and earning power; but, he said: "We have already gladly contributed our flesh and blood in a great and splendid cause and we must bear, too, the financial burden that follows in natural sequence."

Throughout the years since he has been in a position to influence financial movements Sir Frederick has been a power in inducing the flow of British capital to the Dominion. The reputation he has established in London's financial circles makes his advice eagerly sought and that is an asset of the highest value to Canada in whose destiny Sir Frderick is such a profound believer. His name has become one to conjure with in the strength of Canada's banking position. He has earned that name by his masterly grasp of the national problems and his knowledge of the manner in which their solution may be helped by financial measures. Sir Frederick's name has long ago been inscribed on the roll of the great Canadians of the present generation and, beyond this, his services to the country have been such that he has won a definite and well established place in our financial history. It is such names as his that are factors in the growth of this Dominion's prestige in the eyes of the world.

The continued expansion of the Bank of Montreal owes much to having such a General Manager as Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor. The banking life of the country looks to him for guidance and that guidance has always been vouchsafed in safe and sane channels. The name of the Bank of Montreal is synonymous with all that makes for strength and solidity in the financial status of the Dominion, and, as its chief executive, Sir Frederick has won the admiration, respect and the full confidence of Canadians. His fame as a banker is known in financial circles throughout the Empire, and even farther afield. It is a fame that increases as the years pass. He is one of the foremost of our countrymen, and, therefore, his visit to Victoria in the course of a Dominion-wide tour of inspection of the Bank of Montreal's operations is an event that calls for more than passing comment.

GERMANY AND EUROPE

Germany's views of what will happen if she is admitted to the League of Nations are probably summed up in an article published in The Hamburg Fremderblatt, a newspaper which is in close relationship with Herr Stresemann, the Foreign Minister. The article admits there has been a slackening of tension in Europe following the Locarno Treaties, and that Germany has derived benefits through them such as the evacuation of Cologne and the Air Agreement. It points out, however, that there are still obstacles to peace, and one of these it describes as the attitude of the Allies towards the armies of occupation and their "pitiable attitude" towards disarmament which aims "at making the discussion purely theoretical."

The inspired article assumes that once Germany is a member of the League of Nations the occupation of German soil by foreign troops will be an anomaly. Its view is that a real peace must take the place of "mistrust, obstruction and mutual chicanery." The Hamburg paper says that the British strike and the collapse of the franc "are the natural outcome of the world-wide economic chaos produced by the devastations of war and an unholy peace treaty." Locarno, it says, must bring a positive method of co-operation between the nations. It recounts the steps already made in such co-operation—the iron agreement and the German commercial arrangements with France. The hope is expressed that France will perceive that a colonial policy on a grand scale will require an economic partner, and the suggestion is that Germany should become that partner. The article is specific in saying that in its present form Germany cannot carry out the Dawes Plan. It refers, too, to the Polish problem, which is described as both economic and political. In this connection it says: "Those who try to solve these economic and political problems with the shibboleths of France's threatened security and the theory that the economic repression of Germany means the revival of France, will soon be taught by the force of events that their ideas are out of date."

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Dr. F. H. Vizetelly has been investigating the sources of the English language and what he has discovered appears to afford substantiation for the old-time argument in favor of a study of the Classics. Out of a selected list of 20,000 English words it is found that 4,842 come from French derived from Latin; that 2,880 come from Latin direct; that 2,493 come from Greek direct or through Latin, late Latin, French or other sources. The Anglo-Saxon and English words in the list, both of which rank as belonging to the Teutonic branch of languages, number 3,681. There are 136 Low German words, 307 Dutch, 693 Scandanavian, 333 German, 99 Italian, 108 Spanish, 31 Slavonic, 1 Lithuanian, 99 Hebrew, 272 Arabic, 32 from African languages and 102 American. We do not know what is meant by American. It is possible the reference is to the native races of this continent but it may be to the efforts which the present day inhabitants have made to add to the English language. Of hybrid words in the list prepared by Dr. Vizetelly there are 675, and 10 the origin of which is unknown.

A feature of the analysis is that, of the great mass of words which have been incorporated in the English language, perhaps not one-twentieth are entitled to rank as Anglo-Saxon. The English language is entirely a composite one. Foreign words have made it what it is. The language still is changing and being enriched, or the reverse. One fact that stands out in any survey of English, so-called, is that to understand it properly and to fathom its mystery a study of various languages is essential. The most important part of that study is a knowledge of languages which are now numbered among the dead.

STATE INTERFERENCE

Sir Ernest Benn has been giving evidence before a committee on industry and trade of the British Board of Trade, and in discussing the functions of the State in regard to industry and trade he advocates a complete reversal of the policy of the last fifty years. The habit of relying on the State, he says, has weakened individual initiative and reduced the volume of trade. His experience has been that in those trades where Government interference is most active they have gone from bad to worse, whereas those industries which have been left to function freely have never failed to achieve greater prosperity. In other words, Government expenditure for industrial development induces the opposite of the desired result.

In speaking of taxation Sir Ernest expresses the belief that at the back of it there are two related and distinct ideas. One is the belief that the State can make good use of the money, and the other is the desire to punish success. Public expenditure in Britain, he points out, is now at an exceedingly high level, but in his belief public bodies are necessarily the most inefficient and expensive agencies for performing any given function. Taxation, he considers, turns capital into income and thus commits the worst of financial crimes. In Britain, indeed, taxation at the current rates is in many cases no longer a tax on profits or income, but an addition to cost, which thus adds to the price of commodities. The exigencies of taxation, he says, lead to unsound private and business finance.

Mr. Bourassa, the Nationalist of Quebec, is heart and soul with Mr. Mackenzie King in the present election campaign. Mr. Bourassa's new allegiance has been won by the so-called "constitutional issue" which Mr. King has raised. The French-Canadian Nationalist sees in it an effort to weaken the ties which keep Canada within the British Empire.

Propagandist degrees are being given to students at the Moscow Communist University. Recently 200 students graduated, including 48 Finns, 28 Jews, 55 Latvians, 16 Poles, 17 Estonians, 16 White Russians, 10 Germans and 6 Roumanians. Their careers will consist of carrying the doctrine of revolution into the countries of their origin.

There is one difference between the attitude of the Liberal Party and that of the Canadian people towards the Customs Scandal. The Liberals do not like it for political reasons, whereas the people object to it on moral grounds.

A fruitless attempt to interest the British public in eating corn was made in the early nineteenth century by a British journalist.

Note and Comment

By R. B. D.

A most distressing thing has happened. A resident of Duncan informs us that twice recently he has caught us in the act of splitting the infinitive. We are going to make that deeply pained and conventionally punctilious literary critic our Father Confessor, and whisper into his ear that splitting infinitives is the least heinous of our transgressions. Sins of omission, and alas! sins of commission, are too frequently glaring and staring features of this column of The Daily Colonist. We are, therefore, going to make "a clean breast of it" and crave absolution.

A few days ago we said something about the immortal Bill Stubbs and his celebrated mark. Now probably there are many Bill Stubbses in the world, but we doubt whether there is one Bill Stubbs that has achieved immortality. If there is any such person, we never have heard of him. Shortly after, in an indirect way, we were told that it might we well for us to "overhaul our Pickwick Papers and make a note of what we found therein." That hint disturbed our serenity of mind. We went home, found an old and dilapidated copy of the Pickwick Papers, became so deeply interested in what we found therein, although we had read it all over and over again many times before, that the night was far spent ere we recollected that it was business and not pleasure we were pursuing.

When our faculties were finally concentrated on the business of the night, we had no difficulty in finding Bill and his mark. There they were, conspicuously displayed on the upper right hand corner of a page, in big, black, irregularly-formed capital letters, a mystery to the archaeological members of the celebrated club, but perfectly legible and intelligible to the old inhabitant, "BILL STUMPS HIS MARK!"

Having acknowledged an almost inexcusable error of commission for the good of soul and conscience, let us give a moment's consideration to an equally inexcusable error of omission. A few days after we had taken unwarrantable liberties with the name of the illustrious Bill Stumps, we were a consenting party, but not a principal party, to the publication of a libel upon the name of another immortal person, Major Joe Bagstock, the celebrated military authority and man of the world, who described himself as deep, sir, deep, "and devilish sly!" The printer (may God have mercy on his soul) made us deseribe Old Joe as "devilish shy!"

That was a clear and well-established case of libel, for shyness was not one of Major Bagstock's characteristics. We might just as truly have described Alfred Jingle, Esq., of Noplace, Nowhere, or Mr. Richard Swiveller, or Miss Sally Brass, or Mr. Quilp, even Mr. Sam Weller himself, as shy. Diffidence is not a characteristic of the old and seasoned military man, Major Pendennis, a fearless and fascinating, but selfish and unscrupulous, old gentleman, and a contemporary of Major Bagstock, was anything but a guileless soul. But in order to avoid another criticism we may say we know all about the cases of Major Dobbin and Colonel Newcomb, simple, noble, true and self-sacrificing souls.

Now with regard to the unpardonable sin of splitting the infinitive, we recall two interesting cases that are pertinent to the subject. An editorial writer on one of the big Eastern newspapers, reviewing a book that had been placed in his hands for criticism, declared that the writer "split infinitives by the cord." Possibly if all the infinitives we have split were gathered together and piled up in the basement of our modest establishment, we should have sufficient fuel to serve all requirements for the coming Winter, with something over for the grate during the chilly evenings of the Spring.

There are more grievous offences, as we have tried to point out, than taking liberties with the sly and elusive infinitive. The writer whose besetting sin the editorial critic so wittily described died a wealthy man. The critical editor is still alive and a pensioner on the public. During the sessions of Parliament he sits on a seat in the Senate of Canada, and he is worthy of the honor bestowed upon him.

A number of years ago there was an editorial writer on one of the newspapers of Victoria, a clever and forcible writer he was, too, who posed as an authority on the construction of sentences. Every word he wrote was in its proper position in relation to all other words. Preservation of the integrity of the infinitive was an obsession with him. Almost every day he wrote an article ridiculing other writers who thoughtlessly or ignorantly mutilated his pet infinitive. At this time Mr. Charles H. Lugrin was the editor of The Colonist. Mr. Lugrin was a capable newspaper man of long experience. One day the champion of the integrity of the infinitive published an article on his favorite subject. The next day Mr. Lugrin published an article pointing out that in the article defending the integrity of the infinitive there were two split infinitives. We do not believe that from that day down to the present day has there been a word written and published in Victoria about the use and abuse of the infinitive.

On more than one occasion, when going over proofs we have detected slips of the kind referred to by our Duncan friend and corrected them, with the result than an indignant printer has burst in upon us and wanted to know what difference the transposition of a word or two made in the meaning of the sentence. We remember reading a statement made by a well-known literary authority that if he could make his meaning clearer by deliberately splitting his infinitives, he would split them all with the utmost serenity. So there are two schools of thought on this matter of literary elegance.

"Joy Riding"

Sir,—A few evenings back, I was called out late at night by the cries of a boy, and found a father administering a severe castigation to a youth, for using a motor car together with half a dozen other youngsters, against orders, for joy riding at night without lights. The fact that a tire had burst enabled the father to catch them. I commended the father in doing his duty, and wished others might do the same, and we should have less trouble over breaking the law.

What the public wants to know is, who is responsible for issuing drivers' licences to immature youths, who, in moments of danger, have neither the nerve nor discretion to handle a car aright, and are a danger to the public? It is useless to say with the magistrate, "Boys will be boys," which is the complaint of the police, and "no case." What are motor laws made for but to guard the public from danger? The age limit might well be raised in the case of motor drivers, and fifteen years is not a safe age to trust with a twenty-four horse power engine around the streets of Victoria at night in joy riding.

FROLICS ON FARM AT WALL BUILDING

Seventy Years Ago Neighbors Were Invited to "Bee" and Feast Marked Event

When a farmer in the early 50's needed a stone wall on his property he did not send for a stone mason, but invited his friends and neighbors to a stone-frolic. Those lucky enough to receive invitations left their own affairs to the hired man on that day and arrived at the scene of the festivities by sun-up, in numbers ranging from a dozen husky sons of the soil to twenty or thirty, and of all ages from eighteen to sixty. All wore overalls and started work at once.

There was no lack of material for the wall, most farms being more or less cluttered up with loose stones of all shapes and sizes. A recess was taken at noon when doughnuts and huge jugs of cider and pails of buttermilk were passed around. Late in the afternoon the wall was completed, and all hands eagerly answered the call to supper.

The long table, made of boards covered with sheets and sets on sawhorses, was laid in the orchard and heaped with food. A great iron pot bubling over a fire out of doors yielded a flaky potpie for which half a dozen chickens had been sacrificed. Mounds of bread, hot biscuits served with honey, boiled hams, anowy balls of pot-cheese and grape and currant pickles, apples stewed in cider, apple and custard pies, brown, crisp cookies and fresh doughnuts.

Coffee was made in a large boiler, there was plenty of rich cream, and earthenware pitchers at each end of the tabls held cider, buttermilk and lemonade.

After supper the women arrived, and the local fiddler, who probably had helped build the stone wall, tuned up for the dance, which lasted until it was time to go home to milk the cows.

"ECCE, QUAM BONUM"

(To the memory of him who ever fostered our ideals in the realm of Art and Learning—our friend and brother, Ernest Howard Russell.)

Fain would we hear his voice again:
Fain, too, in friendship clasp his hand!
Fain hear that choiring host peal forth
Responsive to his magic wand!

To weep were futile—nor can we Measure our loss in terms of tears;
But by those tender symphonies
That long remembrance oft endears.

Groping, we glimpse the shore beyond—
Adrift upon a silver sea:
Behold, our barque now borne along
A golden tide of melody!

Lo! pressing on—O, why be sad?
We reach the goal of our desire:
Unloosed th' angelic strains, and thou—
Our friend among that heavenly choir!

Wrapt in that radiant aftermath—
The ripening of thy gift divine—
Thou, who all-purposaful achieved,
Doth now sweet concord all combine.

Attuned thy song to new-learned Art:
Immortal chords thy lute doth peal;
And we, with 'bated heart-throbs list'
Ere thou the soothing font unseal.

We thank thee for thy graciousness;
And Him on High, that He did lend
To earth in this our time, one who Ennobled Art to nobler end.

L'envoi

Behold, how good a thing it is
To dwell in unity and love:
Behold, too, thence the path that leads
To His harmonious courts above!

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily British Colonist, August 8th, 1875)

For Nanaimo—The steamer Cariboo Fly left here at 7 o'clock yesterday morning for Comox, Nanaimo and settlements on the East Coast, with the mails, freight and the following passengers: Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Green, Mrs. Patterson, Mrs. Reed, Mrs. Antoine, Messrs. Furness, Campbell, Fleming, Bate, F. Pagden and Romano.

From Puget Sound—The steamer Eliza Anderson arrived here at 7:30 o'clock last evening from Olympia and ports on Puget Sound, with 15 tons of freight and the following passengers: Miss Jessie Willard, Messrs. C. McLarey, J. A. Toomy, E. T. Hamblet, Butler, Marsnaud, R. McCredie, W. Butler, John Johnson, J. Scott, Draper and wife, and H. High and wife. The Anderson will return to the Sound at 10 o'clock this morning.

A Pleasing Feature—The young ladies of the public schools who are to welcome Lord and Lady DuFerin will occupy the four niches of the grand arch at the intersection of Yates and Government Streets, and on the arrival of the Vicereal party will sing the first verse of the National Anthem, after which four of them will present lovely bouquets to the Countess. This will form a very pleasing feature of the ceremonies.

NEED OF DOMINION IS MORE PEOPLE

CANADA HAS ACCOMMODATION FOR TEN TIMES HER PRESENT POPULATION

Col. J. S. Dennis Discusses Immigration Question at Luncheon of Kiwanis

MONTREAL, Aug. 7.—Canada has an overhead of administrative machinery of Federal, Provincial and municipal government, and railway mileage sufficient to take care of a population ten times our present number. We must reduce our overhead charge or meet with disaster. This can only be accomplished by the importation of men and money."

So declared Col. J. S. Dennis, commissioner of Colonization and Development of the C.P.R., at the Kiwanis Club luncheon. His subject was the need of greater immigration.

"Our present population is probably slightly in excess of 9,000,000, but, of courre, falls far short of what we all had hoped it would be by this time, and is totally inadequate to bring about the further development and expansion that we all hopad for," he continued.

Division of Population

"The census of 1921 developed certain interesting facts. It showed that our population at that time amounted to 8,788,483, and that our population was then divided as between rural and urban occupation in the following manner:

	Rural	Urban
Alberta	62.12%	37.88%
British Columbia	52.81	47.19
Manitoba	57.12	42.83
New Brunswick	67.92	32.08
Nova Scotia	56.66	43.34
Ontario	41.80	59.20
P. E. Island	78.45	21.55
Quebec	43.99	56.01
Saskatchewan	71.10	28.90
Yukon	68.58	31.42

He said the figures illustrated the effect of the marked division as between Eastern and Western Canada—Eastern Canada being largely industrial and a large urban population, and Western Canada mainly agricultural with a large percentage engaged in rural occupation. The figures were also an intimation of the division of opinion as between Eastern and Western Canada with reference to the contentious question of a tariff protective policy which was, of course, a political issue regarding which it would be out of place for him on an occasion of this kind to speak further.

National Debt Increase

When Canada undertook to participate in the World War as part of the British Empire, its federal national debt was something less than $400,000,000, whereas today, as a result of participation in the war, and certain other national expenditures on national railways and public works, the debt amounted to about $2,400,000,000.

"It may be accepied as a fact," he said, "that Canada has been blessed with natural resources which justify our present very heavy national debt, and you will readily realize that only by the development of these resources and agricultural land, timber, minerals, fisheries, and water powers, can we hope to carry successfully and ultimately discharge our heavy burden of national debt.

"You are, I think, all aware of the fact that Canada stands in a unique position in connection with the railway mileage in operation per unit of population, the fact being that in no other country in the world is there the same mileage of railway in operation per unit of population, and only by increase of our population and development through our natural resources can we hope to continue to carry the burden of this excessive mileage and make it properly productive.

Method of Development

"Having outlined the general position we now come to the question of how we are to succeed in speeding up the development of our latent natural resources. The desired end can, of course, only be reached by the importation of men and money, and with reference to the men, they can, of course, only be obtained through a proper system of immigration and colonization. With reference to the money necessary to develop our resources, you no doubt are aware of the fact that the large sums which we expended in our great development period between 1905 and 1913, during which time additional railways were being built, our cities, towns and villages were rapidly expanding, certain of our natural resources were being developed, and the money for that expansion and development came very largely from Great Britain. Today the situation has changed, and since the war a larger portion of the sums for such development as we have had has come from the United States. This has resulted in a changed condition under which our financial centre has practically shifted from London to New York, and our Federal, Provincial and municipal governments, together with other large organizations, have been going there for money needed for further expansion or development.

"The result of this is, that in the latest statistics available, it would seem that of the total investment of outside capital in Canada the amount is about equally divided as between Great Britain and certain Continental countries on one side, and the United States on the other, and you are all aware of the remarkable expansion which has taken place within the last few years through the establishment in Canada of branches of American industries."

No Openings for Foreign Labor

Taking up the question of immigration more directly, Col. Dennis said:

"Today we have no particular opening in Canada for foreign labor, skilled mechanics, clerical or professional help, but we have an unlimited opening for the immigration of agriculturists, agricultural laborers and domestic help. Where are we going to get them? Our desire, of course, should be to obtain that class of colonist who can be assimilated into our Canadian ideals and conditions, and naturally we should be desirous of obtaining as large a number as possible from Great Britain.

"Unfortunately the supply of agriculturists and agricultural laborers from Great Britain is limited, due to the fact that Great Britian is an industrial and not an agricultural country, and we must, therefore, look to the northern countries of Europe for the agriculturists and agricultural laborers of which we are in such urgent need."

He quoted statistics issued by the Dominion Government indicating that every agricultural family of five placed upon a farm in Canada expended an annual budget of $1,800 for what was produced by industrial Canada. Every additional agricultural family placed upon the land in Canada provided occupation for one additional man in the industrial occupation.

Every agricultural family placed upon the land provided an annual revenue to the transportation companies of about $700.

These facts, he said, made it perfectly clear how the question of immigration and colonization was closely linked up with the further development of our natural resources through industrial effort.

Immigration Results

"I am glad to be able to report," he continued, "that up to date our immigration results this year would indicate that we are back again on the up grade. You are possibly aware of the fact that during 1925 the total immigration into Canada showed a falling off of 40,000 as compared with 1924. This year I am in hopes that we will again reach at least the 1924 figures, but even then we are going to fall far short of the number which we should be getting if we are going to be able to meet the conditions that I have briefly outlined above.

"Destructive criticism is, of course, the easiest thing in which any of us can engage, and it would be bad taste on my part to take up your time without offering something constructive, I suggest that the adoption of a broad and courageous policy for the study of the problems facing us and an earnest desire on the part of all public bodies in Canada to join in the study of these problems, and taking an active part in their solution is what we are urgently in need of. Judging by the past activities of the Kiwanis Club I feel that you will be in the forefront in doing your share to aid in the development of Canada, so as to make it what nature intended it to be—one of the outstanding countries of the globe."

COLOMBIAN PEARL BEDS NET $500,000 IN 1923

Government Plans to Divide Fishing Into Three Zones for Replenishing

The richest of the Colombian pearl beds are on the north coast of the Gaojira Paninsula, from Cabo de la Vela to Castilletes, says "Commerce Reports." Some pearls are taken near the Bay of Cartagena. Native divers bring up the shells, no equipment being used. Each boat pays the federal government 350 pesos per month licence, and the rulings require that half of the boats operating must be of Colombian ownership, and that no company or individual may employ more than eight boats. Most of the pearls are marketed in Paris.

Pearl fishing resulted in a production valued at $500,000 in 1923. At present the government is planning to take up pearl exploration and fishing directly, developing the industry on the Pacific Coast, where pearl banks are known to exist off the island of Gorgona, in the region of Guapi, and mother-of-pearl off the Bay of Cupica.

Twenty-five per cent of the returns from the pearl fishing go to the federal treasury, twenty-five per cent to the personnel of the boat and fifty per cent to the owner, according to the present plan of operation. This arrangement was established by a commission of fourteen appointed by executive decree for the inspection and exploration of the Pacific pearl beds. The government plan for future operation is to divide pearl fishing into three zones, fixing alternating seasons for fishing, thus giving time for replenishing the beds.

"I am glad you have came,
I'll be sorry when you have went."

VISITING EAGLES ENJOY EXCURSION

AMERICAN LODGE OFFICERS AND DELEGATES DELIGHTED WITH BEAUTIES OF CITY

Mayor Pendray Extends Civic Welcome to F.O.E.—Fine Programme of Entertainment Given

Victoria was host to American Eagles yesterday. A large contingent of the Grand Aerie officers of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, delegates and families, invaded the city on an excursion from Seattle on the specially chartered steamer Princess Adelaide. The visitors spent the afternoon and early evening here, returning to the Sound City following the last item on the programme of entertainment.

Worthy President Frank LeRoy and other officials and members of Victoria Aerie No. 12 were at the wharf to welcome the Seattle party, who, upon arrival, were conducted to the Parliament Building steps, where a civic welcome was extended to the Americans by Mayor Carl Pendray.

"On behalf of the citizens of Victoria, I extend a warm greeting to you," declared the Mayor, in addressing the large gathering of Eagles. "We are very pleased that the Grand Officers of your order decided to visit our beautiful city, and hope that your stay here will prove thoroughly enjoyable. I hope that the time will not be far distant when you will come back again and pay us another visit."

P.G.W.P. Frank E. Herring, editor of The Eagles' Magazine, responded on behalf of the visitors to His Worship's message of welcome. He thanked the Mayor for his kind words, and expressed the great pleasure it afforded the Eagles to come to British Columbia's capital city.

Following an informal luncheon at the Chamber of Commerce, the visitors were taken on an automobile tour of Victoria and vicinity, and were greatly impressed with the wonders of the capital.

The programme of festivity in Victoria came to a close last night at a successful banquet, which was held at the Empress Hotel, commencing at 6:30 o'clock. The excursion to Victoria proved in every sense an unqualified success.

QUALIFIED ELECTORS MAY REGISTER NAMES

Registrars Will Be Sitting All This Week Preparing Lists for Coming Federal Election

During the ensuing week registrars will be sitting in the various polling sub-divisions of the city and in the different subdivisions of the Nanaimo riding surrounding this city. Qualified voters whose names were not on the Provincial list should get on the lists now being prepared for the Dominion election to be held in a little more than a month.

For the benefit of intending voters it is well to make an inspection of the lists as prepared from the Provincial one as it appears in the registration booths. If their names have by any chance been omitted, or if their names were not on the Provincial list, and they are qualified to vote in the Dominion election, they should take care they have their names entered on the new list.

In this connection attention is called to the fact that those who registered on the Dominion list last August, must re-register, unless in the meantime they have had their names placed on the Provincial list.

In addition to the various city registration booths there will be opened in Oak Bay and Esquimalt divisions of the Nanaimo riding registration places under the charge of the following registrars: Mr. William Galt, 2056 Chaucer Street, Ward 9, Oak Bay; Mr. James Shaw, 2366 Zela Street, Ward 8, Oak Bay; Mr. A. E. Cave, 904 Esquimalt Road, Esquimalt.

The registrars will sit from August 9 to August 14.

Longest Drought in Victoria Continues

FOR fifty-four days continuously Victoria has been without rain. This, the longest drought in the weather records of the city, is likely to be exceeded by several further days, at least, as there is no sign at the moment, Director Napier Denison, of the Meteorological Bureau, Gonzales Heights, states, of any change in the weather in the direction of rain. In Victoria this does not matter so much, owing to the humidity of the air at night-time, but the drought conditions are a very serious matter in the upper country where there is not this compensating humidity, although in few parts of the Province has there been a longer period without measurable precipitation than here.

LONG LEASE ON WILLOWS SOUGHT

B.C. Agricultural Association May Not Utilize Grounds Next Year Unless Council Grants Request

The question of whether the Willows grounds will continue to be utilized after this year as the site of the annual Provincial Exhibition in Victoria, will be the chief matter that will be discussed by the British Columbia Agricultural Association at its annual meeting in Victoria on August 20.

It is not unlikely that in the event of the association being unsuccessful in securing a satisfactory lease of Willows Park, the location of the exhibition grounds at the Willows will be abandoned.

Speaking of this matter yesterday, Secretary W. H. Mearns, who is manager of the Fall Fair, said: "The exhibition at Victoria has entirely outgrown the present accommodation, and I will recommend to the annual meeting that authorization be given the directors to prepare a comprehensive plan of betterments, negotiate with the City Council of Victoria for a satisfactory lease covering a term of years, and if successful in obtaining this assistance, undertake the first units of the replacement programme in time for the 1927 exhibition.

"It is impossible for the B.C. Agricultural Association to continue to give an adequate exhibition with the present equipment of buildings. This year most of the main building space is devoted to agricultural products, and accommodation has had to be refused to scores of commercial applicants who have loyally supported the association in past years."

WEST INDIES SEEKING GREATER RECOGNITION

Undeveloped Resources Are Great in Rich Territory, Which Offers Fine Trade Field

Who, except collectors of stamps, knows so much as the names of the British West Indies? writes Lord Olivier in The London Daily News. Even philatelists are less allured to do so now the stamps are mostly characterless replicas of their own insignificant postal label. How charming those old stamps were in their drawing, their engraving, their coloring—the delicate profile of the young crowned Queen, whom all Creoles loved, this effigy helping them; the bonny Barbados Britannia; the argosy in full sail for El Dorado.

The islands themselves fascinate by their names: Bermuda, Nassau, Virgin Gorda, Anegada, St. Kitts, about which we first wondered when we read of the "woolly-headed heiress" at Becky Sharpe's school, Nevis, Antigua, Montserrat, Dominica, St. Lucia, Barbados, which our classicists write "The Barbadoes," St. Vincent, reminiscent of naval glory, Grenada, Trinidad, Tobago, claiming to be the Carib-visited island of Crusoe.

The Cactus Crest

Then there are British Guiana, which sounds sweeter as Demerara; Jamaica, the most admirable of them all; Belize, deplorably known as British Honduras; and that strange, remotest commune of tall white turtlers and shipbuilders, the Caymans; and the endless mirage-hung cays of the Bahamas, running down to Grand Turk, which has adopted the Turk's head cactus, its noblest plant, as its blazon, an island of salt and sand, whose garden hedges bear leaves of the texture and hue of pickled cabbage. What a series! Each impressing its own individual and expugnable charm on whoever sojourns there; each the habitant of a community very conscious of its own individuality and vitality.

These communities have always been units, and their inhabitants have willed that they should remain so, notwithstanding that combination and federation have been constantly preached at them. They will not be federated, and they will not be federated to the United States or to Canada. Their instinct and judgment are right. But they have common interests and in many important respects their prevalent conditions are similar.

Their population numbers more than two million, they have a total annual trade of nearly £40,000,000. The undeveloped resources of British Guiana are great; those of British Honduras considerable. Trinidad and Jamaica have still a future of prosperous growth. West Indians, whilst rejecting the idea of a common government, have long been seeking some means of associating in such a manner as to make their existence as an important item among the British Dominions more generally recognized, and to enable them to speak with a common voice in their common interests.

Working Together

This Summer has seen the establishment of an organization which bids fair to serve these purposes. Representatives of all the colonies named, except Bermuda, have met in London and have unanimously adopted a scheme for a standing "conference." It is proposed that a permanent organization shall be created with a travelling secretary and provision for running his office, and that meetings shall be held alternately in London and in the principal colonies.

The conference has noted a long list of subjects with which its constituents can deal with common interest; for example, agriculture, diseases of animals and plants, aviation, banking and currency, civil service, preferences and trade agreements, shipping laws and regulations, port and harbor dues and regulations, steamship services, customs tariffs and regulations, defence, education (including the project of a West Indian University) tropical agriculture, uniformity of laws, West Indian Court of Appeal, marketing of produce, medical administration, hygiene, sanitation and quarantine laws, police, public utility services, tourist trade and trade representation.

This notable and significant achievement is the culmination of a long series of tentative attempts at establishing a common organ, and the Jamaica Imperial Association, which in 1920 proposed the establishment of such a permanent body, and Sir Edward Davsen, who has worked unweariedly to bring the idea to fulfilment, deserve very hearty congratulation and thanks from the West Indies and Britain for what may prove to be the most important piece of political work done on behalf of the West Indies for generations.

The British are the world's greatest importers of meat.

POTATO GROWERS SEE EXPERIMENTS

Tests Are Made on Lands of Leading Cultivators to Ascertain Important Data

For the past few years the farmers growing potatoes in the Victoria district have been confronted with certain problems. Realizing the necessity for some experimental work on this crop, the Victoria Potato Growers' Association in conjunction with the Dominion Experimental Farm, Sidney, B.C., planned an experiment with the view of:

1. Determining the most suitable varieties to grow in the district.
2. The best treatment of seed before planting.
3. The relative values of using whole and cut seed.
4. The value of using commercial fertilizer.

In order to get the most complete results, these experiments were conducted on farms that were totally unlike with regard to soil conditions. The growers were as follows: Messrs. G. T. Michell, Sidney; W. D. Michell, Keating; W. Somers, Gordon Head; Field Bros., Metchosin, and George Ball, Rocky Point.

On account of different conditions prevailing on these farms at the time of planting and after, the results of the experiments were varied. Again the final results will not be known until the crop has been harvested, and definite information cannot be given out until the experiment has been carried on over a period of years. However, in order that the educational value of this work be brought home to all the growers a field day was organized which took place on Friday. There was a good turnout of all those interested. The plots on all five farms were visited. The problems that have been confusing different growers were studied and some of them solved to the satisfaction of all concerned.

ENTRIES FOR FAIR LARGER THAN EVER

FIFTY TO SEVENTY-FIVE PER CENT INCREASE REPORTED IN VARIOUS CLASSES

Victorians and Tourists Will See Best Exhibition Ever Staged Here—Reduced Railroad Fares

Entries for the various classes at the Willows Fall Fair received to date this year are from fifty to seventy-five per cent greater than at this time in 1925, Secretary W. H. Mearns, of the Provincial Exhibition, stated last night. The list of entries for the exhibition closed last night, and all through the day they were pouring into the temporary office at the Seaward Block.

Victorians will certainly see at the Willows from Monday, August 16, to Saturday, August 21, the biggest and best exhibition ever held in this community.

Not only will there be a much larger attendance of local citizens at the fair next week than has been the experience at previous shows, but there will also be more tourists viewing the fair. Special excursion rates have been arranged on all B.C.'s large railways, to give an opportunity to the people in the interior, and all over the Province to come to Victoria, and witness its annual exhibition.

Railways which give the reduced fairs are announced as follows: Canadian Pacific, Canadian National, Kettle Valley and E. & N. Railways in the Province of British Columbia.

Round trip fares on these lines during the period between August 14 and 23 will be one and one-third times the regular first class one-way fares. Tickets will be on sale from August 14 to 20. The return limit on the Port Alberni branch of the E. & N. Railway will be August 24, and on the Cowichan branch, August 25.

Second Flowering Of Many Plants Is Seen in District

Some very unusual activities of nature are to be noted along the roads leading along the southern extreme of the Island. Several blossoms of the early-flowering dandelion are to be seen along the roadway at the Colwood Golf links. Near Luxton bright patches of yellow discloses many perfect blossoms on the Scotch broom that flourishes in this locality, and this, too, long after the shedding of the annual seed crop from the bushes.

On various fruit trees well-developed blossoms are to be seen in many places. At "Tiswilde," the home of Mrs. McVicker, a large dogwood tree that overhangs the house is a mass of perfect bloom, intermingled with the scarlet bunches of seed, the result of the early Spring flowering time. Wild strawberry plants are frequently seen with blossoms.

So many instances of this second flowering is observed that many inquiries are being made as to the probable cause, and any information in connection with the occurrences mentioned would be of considerable interest.

CHARGE IS DENIED BY VATICAN ORGAN

Mexico's Troubles Are Said to Be Due Not to Church, But to Triumph of Revolutionary Men

ROME, Aug. 7.—The Vatican organ Osservatore Romano, in a lengthy article today, denies the charge made by President Calles of Mexico that the Catholic Church for three centuries had absolutely dominated that country, hindering progress and doing nothing for the betterment of the people. "On the contrary," the article says, "the triumph of men representing the most radical and revolutionary political currents is responsible for all of Mexico's troubles."

The article, entitled "Four Centuries of Catholicism in Mexico," is looked on as expressing the views of the Pope and as the most important statement of the Holy See viewpoint since the beginning of the religious crisis in Mexico. "While the Government puts Mexico to iron and steel," says the article, "to destroy—if it were possible—all traces of religion among the people, while the whole civilized world is indignant at a persecution recalling the first centuries of Christianity, it is strange that the Government tries to blame the church for events which qualify as a religious crisis and attributes the unanimous agreement of all civilized people to their ignorance of Mexico's religious history."

On Friday a concert was given, Mr. Petch adding to the programme with a number of songs. Thanks are extended to Capt. Kirkendals who so kindly lent the tents, and to Mr. Rowles, who was in charge of, and cooked for the sixteen boys.

CURTIS POINT IS MAGNET FOR CARS

AVERAGE NIGHTLY REGISTRATION AROUND EIGHTY, WITH PEAK AT NINETY-NINE

Motorists Are Staying Longer in Auto Camp This Year, Statistics Would Indicate

Curtis Point Automobile Camp, while the number of registrations has not yet reached the figure of 1925, has so far received its best registration on July 22, when ninety-nine cars spent the night within its enclosure. The maximum last year was 105 cars in one night.

The camp received 1,050 cars in the month of July, only a trifling decrease from the corresponding month of 1925. The parties are staying longer in camp, and as a consequence the proceeds will be quite as large as in the Summer of last year.

Come Year After Year

Some of the campers continue to come year after year. Professor and Mrs. H. Augur, of Portland, are in the third year. Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Rice, of Portland, are in the second week of their third annual visit. Mr. and Mrs. G. Williams are staying for the second year, and have become property owners here, due to their interest in what they have seen in the locality.

Some of the principal visitors of the last week and, with one or two exceptions, still in camp, are: Dr. Torrey, San Diego; Mr. and Mrs. Estell, Seattle (second week); Mr. J. H. Stamford, of Catalina, California; Mr. W. E. Thompson, of Saskatoon; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Marshall, of Los Angeles (completed one week), Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Reeve and family, of Everson, Wash., a week; Mr. J. McLaughlin and family (two weeks); Dr. Sinipson, of Lacombe; Mr. C. H. Chapaman and family, Edmonton.

Assets Being Extended

A chat with Mr. Frank Waring, chairman of the trustees, shows that the camp is not only paying its way, but that the assets are being extended. The camp is sharing the use of a swimming pool in the Arm, reached from the camp proeprty, which will become its property at the end of this season.

Motorists using the camp are more than pleased, not only with its acenic beauty, which no critical person can fail to appreciate, but with the character of the conduct of the camp, which is exemplary. This is in sharp contrast to some camps across the line, to judge by press reports and the experience of motorists, who welcome the law-abiding character of the British Columbia camps.

Victoria I.O.O.F. Hold Successful Trip to Seattle

THE annual excursion to Seattle of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which took place yesterday, was one of the most successful cruises ever conducted under the auspices of the Victoria Lodges of the Order. The Ss. Princess Victoria left the C.P. wharves yesterday morning at 9 o'clock for Seattle with a big crowd of Victorians, and on the return trip, pulled out of Seattle at 5:30 p.m. A deigation of Seattle Odd Fellows met the boat and welcomed the excursionists, while the Odd Fellows' Temple in the Sound city was thrown open to the visitors. Dancing was a feature of the programme on the voyage, the Odd Fellows' orchestra providing splendid music.

CRYPT TO PROVIDE FOR SEPULTURE

PRIVILEGE OF INTERMENT MAY BE GRANTED AT THE NEW CATHEDRAL VAULTS.

Contrast Between Medieval and Modern Methods of Building Cathedrals Explained to Visitors

Like the great cathedrals of England and Europe, and the national cathedral at Washington in the United States, provision has been made in the foundations of the new Christ Church Cathedral here for the construction of a number of vaults, opening off the central passage of the crypt. The necessary permission from municipal and provincial authorities having been obtained, plans for the concrete foundations of the new cathedral were made to include spaces for vaults, for use at any future time to become the last resting place of the mortal remains of those whose life and service to church and country it may be determined to honor by the privilege of interment in the cathedral.

A number of hitherto unpublished features concerning the foundations of the new cathedral were divulged on Friday evening when the Archdeacon of Columbia, accompanied by the cathedral architect, Mr. J. C. M. Keith, conducted a group of clergy and officials over the site.

The immense amount of thought which has been put into the planning of the new cathedral was revealed, as details were pointed out showing how the new building has been conceived architecturally along time-honored cathedral lines.

Certain contrasts between medieval and modern methods of building cathedrals were explained, and the system of reinforcements by means of sirong metal rods was illustrated. The western towers, for instance, will be built upon a matting of metal entirely contained in solid concrete. This has been done to provide for the vibrations due to the swing of heavy bells which, it is hoped, will some day be installed in the towers. The weight of the metal rods in the foundations is about twenty-five tons.

Concrete Foundations

It is estimated that the concrete for the foundations beneath the floor level will be finished early this week. Already the forms for the floor slab are being constructed in readiness for pouring the concrete, so that there will be no delay in continuing the work and having it completed for the foundation stone ceremonies when the Bishop of London visits Victoria on September 9.

The mixing machine operated by the contractors, Messrs. Parfitt Brothers, is turning out about a yard of concrete every three minutes. From 140 to 145 yards of concrete are being poured daily, and a total of 2,000 yards of concrete have been laid to date. About forty men are engaged on the site.

Another interesting feature referred to, which again illustrated the thoroughness with which the cathedral is being planned, was that arrangements have been made to use part of the passage under the central tower as a temporary chapel, in which daily services may be held while the nave is being erected. It was stated that similar services at Truro and Liverpool Cathedrals had been attended by a number of workmen engaged in the construction of the sacred edifice, who thus sought to emulate the devotional spirit of some of the cathedral builders of elden times. Part of the crypt will also be reserved for use by the workmen at meal times, and as required on occasions of inclement weather.

City Hall Activities in Brief

Several by-laws will be dealt with by the City Council at its fortnightly session tomorrow evening at the City Hall. Alderman John L. Mara will introduce the "Oak Bay Avenue Change of Name By-Law, 1926," which proposes to alter the name of Pandora Avenue, from Oak Bay Junction to Foul Bay Road, to the name Oak Bay Avenue. It is understood there is in circulation a petition, signed by a number of ratepayers and residents on the thoroughfare in question, in support of the project.

Another measure to be considered is the "Streets Traffic and Regulations By-Law, 1926," which is now in the committee stage. The City Police Commission recently considered this by-law, and recommended certain changes and additions to the original draft. The Council will likely make final decision on these points tomorrow night.

A building permit was issued yesterday at the City Hall to Miss Agnes Swan for the construction of a frame dwelling, containing three rooms, at 510 Simcoe Street (Lot 16, Block 1, Map 1134). It is estimated that the cost will amount to $1,400. The contractor is Mr. C. Harris.

City Comptroller D. A. Macdonald was welcomed back at the City Hall yesterday by his colleagues, following his annual holidays. The City Comptroller and family spent a pleasant vacation at Qualicum Beach.

Wiring permits taken out yesterday at the City Hall were as follows: By Ashcroft Electric Company, for service station of Jones Bros., 806 Yates Street; by Oak Bay Electric Company, for residence of Mr. Cowper 123 Wellington Avenue, and by Hawkins & Hayward for gasoline station of Jones & Rant, corner of Cormorant and Broad Streets.

Two meetings of civic bodies are scheduled to take place during the present week. The Board of Cemetery Trustees of Greater Victoria will convene on Wednesday night at 8 o'clock, at the City Hall, while on Thursday, at 4 p.m., the City Police Commission will go into session in Chief Fry's office at the Police Station on Fisgard Street.

Mr. T. H. Slater took out a permit yesterday at the city building department for the construction of a balcony and alterations to residence at 1729 Duchess Street (Lot 24, Block 13-17 Fernwod, Map 270), at a cost of $1,000.

WILL MOTOR CAMP BE LOCATED FACING GORGE FROM SOUTH?

Inquiries have been made, The Colonist is informed, for a site on the south side of the Gorge waters, to the east of the property proposed to be acquired for the James Bay Athletic Association, with extensive waterfrontage.

It is believed the objective is to obtain a property to develop for motor camp purposes. If such should be the case, it would be almost opposite the Curtis Point Automobile Camp, upon which a lease exists for five years, which will expire in March, 1928.

The impression prevails in the city that whether by public effort, as at present, or by private enterprise, some provision will have to be made for campers between Craigflower Bridge and Selkirk water, near enough to the city, and close to the Island Highway, should the lease of the present commodious camp not be renewed at the date mentioned.

MR. DOUCET SAYS INQUIRY NOT MADE

SITTING AT QUEBEC DID NOT DEAL WITH STATEMENTS HE ACTUALLY MADE

All That Was Investigated, He Claims, Was the Truth of Assertions Wrongly Imputed to Him

QUEBEC, Aug. 7.—During a brief session today of the inquiry held by Sir Francois Lemieux, a statement was read on behalf of Mr. A. J. Doucet, former M.P. for Kent, N.B., by Hon. Belley, his counsel.

Mr. Doucet's statement was, in part, as follows:

"This commission began its work on Thursday, August 5, 1926, at Quebec, heard a few witnesses on particular facts, but has not yet touched essential facts pertaining to the affair.

"The witnesses heard last Thursday were asked only questions to prove that the words reported by newspapers as having been said by Mr. Doucet at a public meeting in St. John, N.B., were not true, and these words have afterwards been used, as reported, to accuse Mr. Doucet of having launched public calumnies.

"It has not been proved," said Mr. Belley, "before this commission that Mr. Doucet really pronounced the words attributed to him. The evidence of witnesses last Thursday is illegal, contrary to all laws of proof, and assumes the character of a great injustice, owing to the fact that statements were made in the absence of Mr. Doucet and without giving him occasion to deny them, and defend himself and place before the commission the words he actually used."

Mr. Doucet Comes to Quebec

Mr. Doucet, hearing what took place on Thursday, and being informed that the commission was to sit today, came to Quebec to appear and to state that he was ready to prove the truth of the words he actually used at St. John.

"Mr. Doucet affirmad at St. John," continued Mr. Belley, "that in 1923 the Margaret was used, under the cover of an inspection trip, for a pleasure trip by one of the Ministers, in the St. Lawrence. He reasserts that this is the truth. Mr. Doucet further affirms, basing himself on the fact given under oath, that not only such an excursion was made in 1923, but that it was repeated in 1924 and 1925 on the same boat."

Half Chinese Village Dies of Cholera Plague

SHANGHAI, Aug. 7.—A fall of four points in temperature today below yesterday's thirty-year record of 102.2 degrees has checked the number of prostrations and alleviated slightly the cholera epidemic which developed with appalling swiftness with the mounting thermometer.

In one Pao Tung village half the population died in three days. Only two foreigners have died from the disease and less than a dozen from the heat. The hospital facilities among the Chinese are utterly inadequate.

SOVIET LAND LAWS DEFIED BY PEASANTS

Trading in Real Estate Reported Active in Russia Despite Bolshevist Prohibition

Further confirmation of recent reports from Moscow telling how the great majority of the Russian peasants is asserting its mass power in defiance, or ignorance, of the elaborate laws laid down by the Communist Government for the conduct of human affairs, is found in the items reprinted from Pravda, the official Moscow organ of the Russian Communist Party, by the Berlin Information Bulletin of the Russian Social Democracy. Judging from these bits of news from the heart of Russia, the more prosperous peasants are engaged in buying up the land holdings of their poorer brothers, regardless of the fact that Article 27 of the Soviet agrarian laws expressly forbids the sale or purchase of land.

The "Kulaki" (fists, the slang term for the wealthier peasants) evidently do not fear the drastic punishments for offenders against this regulation provided by the law, as they are going ahead with their land deals just as unconcerned about the future as are the "nep men" (the private traders), who are profiting by the lifting of the ban on commercial enterprise.

In its issue of June 5, Pravda printed an especially big batch of reports from its country correspondents concerning dealings in land. From the Ivanovo-Vosmesensk Government it was reported that "six poor peasant families in the village of Khrustovo are entirely dependent upon a village usurer, who secretly owns ten dessyatins (about twenty-five acres) of land that he is selling by bits."

Pressure on Laborers

In the Pervomalsky district "the big farmers are putting powerful pressure upon the farm laborers. Nearly all of the land is in their hands, some of them having as much as thirty dessyatins. It is true the poor of the village have some land, but they are often compelled to turn it over to the big farmers for exploitation. A rich farmer even bought the estate of a former landholder, with the eight and a half dessyatins going with it, for 960 rubles."

In the Poltava Government "most of the landholders in the Lubensky district have succeeded in selling the land they obtained through the expropriations effected under the revolutionary laws. Already there are seventy-five cases in which such sale agreements have been made." Not only individuals, but also local communities, violate the regulations about the sale of land. "In the Voronesh Government a country community sold fifteen dessyatins of the community's reserve land in order to pay a debt of 340 rubles owed to a co-operative." In many instances the sales are of a speculative character. The peasant receives his portion of land, builds some sort of a house on it and then sells the land at a price several times that of the house. The correspondent of Pravda adds:

"The rich merchants not only are accumulating farm buildings, but they are buying up the land and paying many thousands of rubles for it."

Soviet Officials Sell

Pravda points out that many of the sellers of land are former Soviet officials.

Violations of the labor laws by the employing farmers and their wage workers are reported as of everyday occurrence. Some of the contracts quoted by German papers from Russian publications are cited as reminiscent of feudal days. Trud, the central organ of the All-Russian Labor Unions, quoted as follows from a pact signed on Jan. 16, 1926:

"We, the undersigned, Sakhari Gnedysh and Mefodi Ivanof, assume the following obligation: I, Gnedysh, put Ivanof to work in my establishment for five years; and I, Ivanof, obligate myself to do any work that is put before me during these five years, and I also declare that in case of my marriage, my wife shall also be obligated to work in the establishment of Gnedysh until the end of these five years."

This contract is averred to have been approved by the Soviet authorities of the district.

In another instance a wandering Communist agitator discovered that a father had bound out his young daughter to a farmer in the capacity of "an honest wife" and maid of all work. He took the father to task and told him that the Soviet Government would not permit such agreements. Whereupon the father produced a written contract stamped by the local Soviet Executive Committee.

Writing in The Krasnaya Gazeta of Leningrad, Serofimovitch, a well-known Russian author, averred that, according to his own observations in the Crimea, the women working on the tobacco plantations and in the vineyards were just as much slaves, in every way, of their bosses as they had been in the days of the Czar.

Awards Given for Long Family and Service Records

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Remarkable family and service records were revealed recently by awards made at Lincolnshire County Show at Louth.

In the class for big families the first prize went to Joseph Maltby, of Tattershall Thorpe, near Lincoln, who was the father of seventeen children, fourteen of whom had been brought up, and thirteen placed out without having received parochial relief.

The second award was made to William Hewson, of North Thoresby, near Louth, with fourteen children born, fourteen brought up, and fourteen placed.

Charles Broughton, of Mucklow, near Louth, took the third prize, his record being thirteen brought up and placed in situations out of fourteen born.

There were ten entries, and the total number of children in these ten families was 140.

The long service records included the following: Working agricultural foreman, Henry Smith, of Barrow-on-Humber, forty-four years; shepherd, Samuel Lee, of Martin, near Lincoln, forty-six years; servant in husbandry, Walter Brown, of Narborough, fifty-four years; female servant, Annie Tranfield, of Lincoln, thirty-two years.

In the long service section there was a total of forty-seven entries, and in the principal class the aggregate service of twenty men was 900 years.

LIEUT.-GOVERNOR AT HOME TO SIGHTLESS

Members of Canadian National Institute for Blind Enjoy Garden Party at Government House

His Honor R. Randolph Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor, and Miss Helen Mackenzie were "at home" to members of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind yesterday afternoon at Government House. The guests were received on the lawn immediately in front of the rustic Summer house, Miss Mackenzie wearing a charming frock of grey crepe back satin with a soft pink picture hat.

Among the blind members who were present were Mrs. W. H. Woodford, Miss Baty, Mrs. G. B. Lyall, Mr. A. P. Archibald, Mr. E. A. Harvey, Mr. Thomas Liddiard, Mr. G. W. Lilley, Mr. Bertram Mayell, Mr. F. C. Temblett, Mr. E. H. Varze, Mr. A. Varney, Mr. A. White, Mr. Horace Woodfield, Mr. C. P. Cox, Mr. J. Combe. Others present were Mrs. Curtis Sampson, Mrs. Hebden Gillespie, Mrs. Albert Griffiths, Mrs. L. A. Genge, Mrs. H. Fleming, Rt. Rev. C. de V. Schofield and Mrs. Schofield, Rt. Rev. T. O'Donnell, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Sipprell, Dr. and Mrs. Scott-Moncrieff, Dr. Keyes, and Mr. J. L. White, of Vancouver, Miss Geraldine Leetham, district secretary, Canadian National Institute for the Blind for Alberta and British Columbia, was also present.

Home Teacher's Work

Mrs. J. A. Scott, whose work as a home teacher in connection with the institute has done so much towards relieving those who are afflicted with blindness, was among the guests. Herself a blind woman, Mrs. Scott is particularly able to understand and help those "who live in the dark," as she says. She comes over to Victoria from Vancouver every three weeks and while here her time is taken up with visiting her pupils in their homes, teaching them basketry, typing, reading by means of Braille and the Moon-Type lettering, and in many ways helping to make their lives bright and useful.

"It is because I am blind myself that I am able to appeal to them," said Mrs. Scott, while chatting with a representative of The Colonist while at tea in the Summer house. One of Mrs. Scott's pupils living on Vancouver Island had become blind as a result of an accident. He was discouraged and inclined to give up hope. But by the combined efforts of the institute and Mrs. Scott's personal help he was taught to take an interest in gardening. "He is now supporting his family by means of his excellent market garden," said Mrs. Scott, "and it is only in the Spring, when the difficulty of separating weeds from young plants confronts him, that this blind gardener is not absolutely self reliant."

"This garden must be very lovely," added Mrs. Scott with enthusiasm. "I can feel that it is, although I cannot see it as you can. But although each individual object, each flower makes an impression on my mind, it is impossible for me to visualise scenery, the blending of color and shades of color."

Industries for Blind

Among the many industries which blind people are able to follow is that of broom making, fourteen men being employed in a Vancouver broom factory which is turning out goods equal in merit to any which can be produced by those who have their sight.

After enjoying tea on the lawn the guests found pleasure in wandering through the grounds, now a blaze of late Summer flowers.

Women's Institutes

Esquimalt

Winners of prizes at the Esquimalt Women's Institute Exhibition held on July 26 are requested to collect their awards any evening after 5 o'clock at the home of the treasurer, Mrs. Kelly, 1354 Esquimalt Road. At the monthly meeting held a week earlier than usual to dispose of business connected with the exhibition, it was announced that a bronze medal had been awarded by the Department of Agriculture to Mr. Booth for eggs exhibited by him which had proved perfect in all points. A book presented by the department was awarded to Mr. Saddler as a special prize for his collection of dahlias.

Further arrangements were made for the Country Fair to be held on September 4 on the Canteen grounds to raise funds for the Esquimalt War Memorial, and Mrs. Brooker was appointed convener of afternoon tea.

Suggestions for future policy of the institutes, offered by Mrs. J. D. Gordon and distributed from the department, were fully discussed by the members, and in regard to those referring to the conference it was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the official delegate.

Classes in fancy work will be held under the auspices of the institute, to begin early in October, and will be open to non-members as well as members.

Colwood

The Colwood Women's Institute is holding a garden party at Hailey Park on Wednesday afternoon. The gardens will be open from 1 till 6 o'clock.

HATS OFF TO THE HAT OF THE HOUR!

HATS are going up! What, up in price? No, only up with "Buttons" to the room where someone is waiting with impatient anticipation for her purchases of the day. And they are going up in another sense, for the crowns are going higher, and if Milady would be in the height of fashion, she must really be literal about it.

Of course, Easter "bonnets" are thrilling enough, with the brightness of their coloring and their flowery freshness, but there is something more sophisticated in the simpler beauty of the hats of this later season. There are the jaunty little feather-weight felts, for instance, designed to meet the demands of the Indian Summer, or the velour felts and beautiful satin-finished velours for which the oracles of fashion forecast a great popularity this season.

Fascinating are the names of the most popular colors for the modern chapeau. They begin with Spanish Raisin, Jungle Green, Mother Goose, Aladdin, Cinderella and Claret Red.

Prudence Says So

Prudence Believes That "An Apple a Day Keeps the Doctor Away," and Is Listing a Few Appetizing Dishes to Be Made

The apple is decidedly the most useful of all our fruits, and in addition to being exceedingly healthy, either raw or cooked, the apple lends itself to more dishes, both savory and sweet, than any other fruit. Who would care for roast pork or goose if the pleasant corrective acid of apple sauce were not its accompaniment. Then, too, fried sausages are much improved by an addition of fried apples. But I must go on to sweet dishes for there are so many, and the ones we give may help to suggest other dishes which can be made with apples.

William Tell Pudding

Peel and core six medium sized apples; fill the cavities with chopped figs or dates; make a batter with an egg, a quarter of a pound of flour, and half a pint of milk. Place the apples in a tin, well greased, and pour over them the batter; bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour. Turn out for serving.

Apple Crumble Pudding

One-third cup flour, three-quarters of a cup of brown sugar, a quarter of a cup of butter. Put these ingredients into a bowl and mix with a fork. Peel some apples and slice them as for a pie. Fill the dish three-quarters full and put the above mixture on top. Bake about twenty minutes and serve at once with cream. (This is very good cold.)

Apple Snow

This is a very simple recipe, but makes a delicious sweet. Cook about eight apples as for apple sauce, and when cool beat in the whites of three eggs, which have been whipped to a stiff froth. Flavor with a little lemon rind and set on ice to chill.

Gateau of Apples

Two pounds of apples, pared and cored; half an ounce of gelatine, three ounces of sugar, one gill of cold water, and the grated rind of a lemon. Melt the sugar in the water and when boiling put in the apples cut in four and the lemon; when soft pass through a sieve, add gelatine and pour into a mould; part of the shape may be colored with cochineal.

Apple Sauce Cake

In addition to apples as puddings you may also make an apple sauce cake which is very good. Mix together one and a half cups of fine apple sauce, onec up of sugar, half a cup of butter, one cup of raisins, one teaspoon of cinnamon, one teaspoon of nutmeg, one teaspoon of cloves, one teaspoon of soda and two and a half cups of flour. Bake for nearly an hour in a slow oven.

Spiced Jelly

Extract the juice of apples as for apple jelly, and to every five and a half cups of juice add half a cup of vinegar, three tablespoons of pickling spice (tied in a bag), and six cups of sugar. Boil until it jells. It is delicious served with hot or cold meats.

Apple Chow

This may be a new recipe for your collection of preserves. Take four and a half pounds of green tomatoes, four and a half pounds of apples, four pounds of brown sugar, three pints of vinegar, two teaspoons each of cinnamon and nutmeg, one teaspoon of cloves. Put the tomatoes through the mincer and sprinkle with a cup of salt. Let them stand over night. In the morning drain, and add the apple which has been put through the mincer, and then the other ingredients. Boil for one hour and bottle.

Fashion Fancies

By Marie Belmont

Pale yellow georgette is the material used for the youthful combination above. A new note is introduced in the fitted waistband of ecru lace over net, which tops the pantie section that is finely pleated and gives the effect of a very short petticoat.

Separate panties also featuring the fitted waistband are being shown in a number of the shops. The simpler ones of these are made of fine voile or handkerchief linen, with the fitted waistband to match, and showing a band of hemstitching where it joins the lower section.

MANY EXHIBITS BY WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

Comprehensive Exhibit of B.C. Wools —Domestic Science Display to Endow University

The Women's Building at the Willows Fair promises to be one of the most interesting exhibits. Mrs. H. Crocker is in charge of this section and has enlisted the co-operation of many organizations in the city.

Mrs. Dennis Harris is preparing a most comprehensive exhibit of British Columbia wools in the various processes of manufacture from the raw state to the finished garment. A special display of furs made from B.C. rabbits will also prove interesting.

The Women's Institutes always rally well to the call of the Fall Fair. This year will see excellent displays by Colwood, Royal Oak, and Victoria W.I. Esquimalt W.I., which has hitherto been one of the leading exhibitors in the Institute section will not show this year, its efforts having been devoted to its own very successful show at Esquimalt recently.

A number of institutes, additional to those showing, will lend valuable assistance at the Women's Building, those helping including Langford, represented by Mrs. Brindley and helpers; South Saanich, by Mrs. Nimmo; Victoria, by Miss Ravenhill; Esquimalt, Mrs. Brooker; Happy Valley and Luxton, Mrs. Hall; Metchosin, Mrs. Taylor.

On the ground floor of the building there will also be a fine display of domestic science by the women of British Columbia to raise $80,000 to endow a chair of domestic science at the University of British Columbia. There will also be a comprehensive needlework section and laundry section.

Upstairs will be devoted to the largest exhibition of art that has ever been seen at the Fall Fair. Professional and amateur photographers will both have fine displays. Mrs. Grute will be in charge of an exhibit of pottery made in British Columbia from local clays, and there will also be a fine collection of painted china.

Old-timers as well as new-comers will find much of historic interest in a series of pictures of old Victoria, loaned by Mr. A. H. Maynard, showing local scenes and people in the early days.

Miss Robinson and Miss Keast are arranging an exhibition by the children of their classes, and another exhibit of particular interest to the little ones will be the Junior Red Cross booth.

Demonstrations of Dennison art are being arranged by Diggon's, and there will be free classes for women each afternoon during the Fair week.

Princess of Greece Leaves Large Fortune

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Property valued at $2,582,331, consisting almost entirely of jewelry, was left by the late Princess Anastasia of Greece, who was the widow of Mr. William B. Leeds, the "tin plate king." Among her debts was one of 382,215 francs, for lingerie purchased in a shop in Paris.

It was reported that the Princess had spent $10,000,000 financing the return to the Greek throne of King Constantine.

Under her will the chief beneficiaries were her second husband, Prince Christopher of Greece, and Mrs. Margaret Stewart Green.

Her son, Mr. William B. Leeds, jr., of Oyster Bay, L.I., who married Princess Xenia of Russia, received no substantial provision under the will because of his inheritance of $7,000,000 from his father.

Women Benefit by Fashion's Fancies

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Short skirts and scanty underclothing, the present whim of Dame Fashion, brought approval from speakers at the convention of the Pacific Coast Association of Chiropractors here. Skirts that trailed the ground were germ collectors and it was not until these and high collars, confining waist lines and clothes heavily laden with embroideries and ornaments were discarded that women gave their bodies a chance to breathe, the chiropractors declared.

Women's temperaments were blamed for ill-health, speakers declaring that fears and worries create poisons which are responsible for sickness.

Fashions and Foibles

Paris cuts its cloth to the pattern of a two-piece frock on semi-suit lines with a blouse that looks like a smart jacket and a vestee and sleeve puffs that have the air of a soft blouse. The French dressmakers are making these dresses in silk or satin crepe in the same pastel colors that they are using for suits. Pale grey flat crepe with the vestee and sleeve puffs of georgette crepe of the same shade embroidered in silver and gold metallic threads makes quite an elegant little frock. Purple crepe with a lighter violet in the georgette is new.

Holliday and Watson Fight to No Decision

Vancouver Lad Shows Fine Form in Last Rounds of Fighting but Fails to Get Verdict Over Portland Boy—Hayes Gets Close Award Over Dave Lewis —Good Bouts Are Seen

Harvey Holliday, Vancouver, and Jimmy Watson, Portland, went ten fast rounds to a draw in the main event of the boxing programme put on at the Willows Arena last night. The decision was not too popular with the fans, the majority figuring Holliday to have an edge. Phil Bayes, of Portland, gained a judges' decision over Dave Lewis, of Victoria, in the semi-wind-up. A light crowd was in attendance.

Holliday's great fighting stamina was evidenced in the closing rounds. Taking punishment in the fifth, Holliday stayed with the ship and, although bleeding badly from the mouth, showed his grit and gave the Portland boy a hot reception towards the end of the fight.

Portland Boy Has Weight

The Portland boy appeared to have a big edge as far as weight was concerned, but according to the official weigher-in only two pounds separated the combatants. Holliday had the edge in the early fighting. Watson proved to be a crafty boy and went along to gain the points in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh rounds. The eighth, ninth and tenth were Holliday's by a good margin.

Both fighters appeared cautious in the first round and few blows were exchanged. Holliday forced the fighting, but his opponent tied him up like a knot and nothing startled the crowd. The second round went to Holliday by a scant margin, two blows to the jaw giving him the edge. The third also went to Holliday on his aggressiveness.

The fourth saw a change in the Portland boy's tactics, although little real mixing was seen. Holliday missed with a right and the American boy landed with his left to the body to make the Vancouver boy wince.

A smashing blow to the face opened Holliday's lower lip in the fifth and Watson played for this point throughout the remaining rounds. Holliday, however, covered up well and Watson failed to land his objective once.

Holliday Opens Up

In the sixth Holliday opened up and exchanges were frequent. Twice the Mainland boy forced his opponent to the ropes, but he could not come through with a telling blow. A right to the jaw staggered the American boy for a second, but he went into a clinch and the effects soon wore off. Holliday's great right landed some telling blows in the last two rounds but the Portland boy did not falter. Twice he landed rights to the jaw but the Portlander took them and smiled. In the last round Holliday looked for an opening but Watson was too clever and covered up, tieing the Vancouver boxer up at every turn.

Dave Lewis, of Victoria, was a little scarce of a decision in his bout with Phil Bayes, of Portland. The local boy forced the fighting throughout but the weight of the American lad was too much and the judges awarded a none too popular decision. Lewis appeared to be several pounds short of his opponent.

Neal Beats Pascoe

The fighting barber was awarded his second decision over Danny Pascoe. Six slugging rounds were the order but Neal showed plenty of form and had a big edge on the bout. Sam Jones, of England, and Albie Davies went through four milling rounds to a draw in the opening event.

MAGNIFICENT ARRAY OF CUPS ON DISPLAY

Unusually Fine Collection Awaits Owners of Winning Dogs at Coming Exhibition

Intending exhibitors of dogs at the big exhibition show will have an opportunity of inspecting the large cups and trophies donated for what is expected to be a record show for the Island. Messrs. Mearns & Fuller now have the prizes displayed in their windows at the corner of Douglas and View Streets. Included is perhaps the most handsome trophy ever offered in British Columbia for competition at a dog show. This is the challenge shield generously donated by ex-Lieutenant-Governor Walter C. Nichol for the best gun dog owned in the Province. Entries close on Saturday evening, August 14, and any pure bred dog is eligible, whether pedigreed or not. Entry forms can be obtained from Mr. Mearns or from the show secretary, Mr. J. Bryant, 563 Head Street.

The Bowling Green

By LONG JACK

Teams in the Greater Victoria League are now in the last lap of a keen contest for the Walter Cameron Nichol Cup.

Prior to a slight slip last week at Burnside, the present holders were the "All Blacks" of the bowling green. Now they are only "Near Blacks." The Ramblers are, however, an excellent eight, made up of the last five men left in the Victoria Club singles championship, while the other three have all won high honors in previous years.

The two other strings to the bow of the senior club (Rovers and Rangers) contain equally good talent, and it is merely a question of which member of the trio will carve its name on the silverware this year.

Of course, the Burnsiders are foemen worthy of their "Wood," but the odds are heavy against the junior club men, though they may be depended upon to make a strong finish.

The C.P.R. representatives are lagging in the race but they are gaining lots of experience, and their efforts may yet very materially affect the result, although they themselves cannot hope to win a top position.

The idea of the Burnside Club in staging its singles championship in August, when all players are at the top of their form, is worth watching. At any rate there will be no unseamly delays as the rule is win or lose, play or perish, within the dates fixed, absolutely no exceptions. It is an individual and concrete competition which requires to be commenced and completed in August. This is one of the conditions made by the donors of Burnside's first trophy.

Apropos the article which appeared in this paper regarding the proposed new clubhouse at Burnside, a letter has been received from a local sportsman who offers to purchase $250.00 or $500.00 worth of stock in this club, provided another six gentlemen will put up equal amounts. His letter has been forwarded to the secretary of the club.

Good Salmon Trolling

GOOD salmon trolling is reported from all up-Island resorts just now. The tyees are running at Campbell River and some nice fish have been taken. The springs are also reported as taking well at Cowichan Bay, and a few cohoes are being caught during the day. A school of blackfish was observed in the Bay one day last week, which appeared to have an effect on the salmon, catches being few and far between that morning.

Cathedral Cricket Teams Are in Winning Streak

Two C's and Five C's Both Successful in Yesterday's League Matches—Munsey Scores a Century Against Harlequins at Beacon Hill

The Christ Church cricketers proved in winning form yesterday, both the Five C's and the Two C's winning their Virtue Cup matches. Playing at Cowichan the Two C's defeated the Up-Island club by 30 runs after an interesting game, the feature of the match being a score of 45, not out, by Cox for the winners. The Five C's won their match against the Victoria Harlequins at Beacon Hill with great ease, Munsey and Butterworth, who went in first for the Churchmen, making a long stand before their partnership was dissolved. Munsey was not out scoring an even century and Butterworth made 55. Munsey was missed at the wicket when he had made 42, but he played a remarkably fine innings. His score included eleven fours and seven threes.

Payne had the best bowling analysis with three wickets for eleven runs.

The Cowichan Wanderers did fairly well away from home, defeating the University Incogs by 159 to 125. But for Allen, the Incogs batsmen made a miserable showing. He was top scorer with 91, the only other double figure scores being R. Tye with 10 and G. Wenman with 11.

Scheme Appeals

Major Wise, of Wise & Company, who took such an active part in the organization of the proposed country club at Towner Bay, reports that there is a good deal of interest being manifested by families desiring Summer cottages near the city without the responsibility of a Summer home under the ordinary conditions that accompany such a situation. The plan which he has in view appeals to them as very much freer from many of the disadvantages that go with a Summer home.

WINNIPEG PIPERS WIN AT VANCOUVER

Victoria Y.M.C.A. Wins Junior League Relay at St. Andrew's Sports on Mainland Track

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—With the skirl of the pipes echoing above the cheers of 5,000 sons and daughters of Auld Scotia, the fourtieth annual Vancouver Caledonia games were held here today at the Vancouver exhibition under the auspices of the St. Andrew's and Caledonian society. The piping events were the centre of interest, eclipsing even the highland dancing and the athletic events on the track. The climax of the programme was the pipe band contest for the J. W. Stewart trophy emblematic of the Pacific Coast championship, which was won again by Cameron Highlanders of Winnipeg.

Camerons, winners of this event last year, came from the east to compete for this trophy. They met strong competition from Vancouver and Victoria bands.

Senior athletic events were staged during the afternoon, and there was strong competition furnished by contingents from Victoria and other outside points.

100 yards (open)—Percy Williams, V.A.A.C.; George Clark, University of Washington; J. McLaren, V.A.A.C. Time: 10 2-5 seconds.

Gilliflower and North Shore Provide Upsets

Former Pays Thirty to One to Win While Latter's Odds Are Better Than Twenty-Five to One—Poor Puss Breaks Track Record

Gilliflower and North Shore were the big upsets at the concluding day of the Colwood racing meet. The former paid the second largest price of the meet when she breezed under the wire a winner in the fourth event to pay the handsome prices of $60.60, $24.75 and $10.95, while the latter came home to win to reward his backers with the round figures of $52.30 for a $2 nose bet. Prices paid yesterday were good, only two of the winning ponies paying less than double figures.

Poor Puss took the feature event of the card when she came home to win the Colwood Park Handicap over six furlongs from a classy field. Mushon, the favorite, was second. Poor Puss established a new record by negotiating the distance in 1:13 4-5.

Lady Goldstream, a filly bred by A. C. Smith at Colwood, was promenaded before the stands after the fifth event and received a great hand from the large crowd. The filly, black as the ace o' spades, looked the picture of its mother, Bess Wing, and pranced around like a real racehorse. Vancouver Island apparently is a great place to breed horses, from the looks of the young filly.

BRITISH COLUMBIA CRICKETERS WIN ALL MATCHES

British Columbia's Cricket Team Makes It Even Half-Dozen

Finish Interprovincial Tournament in Blaze of Glory After Winning Every Match—Alberta Eleven, Their Last Victims, Suffer Defeat by Five Wickets in Final of the Series

EDMONTON, Aug. 7.—British Columbia's team finished up the Western Canada cricket tournament in a blaze of glory here this afternoon by registering their sixth win in as many starts, their victims in their last fixture being Alberta, whom they defeated by a score of 142 for five wickets to 131. Alberta batted first, and there was nothing very spectacular about their innings. Six wickets were down for 83, and then Murdoch and Johnson made a good stand and carried the score to 123 before Murdoch was dismissed. Eight runs were all that the three remaining wickets were able to add against the fine British Columbia bowling.

Wenman and Carr-Hilton were the outstanding batsmen for British Columbia, the former hitting up 59 without giving a chance before failing "leg before" to Hardisty, and the latter piling up 52 not out. As soon as the Alberta total was passed the British Columbia team declared.

Saskatchewan, batting first against Manitoba, rolled up a count of 133, O'Hara 38, Foster 30 not out, and Horton 18 being the big scorers. Manitoba was unable to cope with the bowling of Ball, Foster and Wade, and only three men reached double figures, the side being retired in short order for 73.

The final standing is as follows—British Columbia, won 6, lost 0; Manitoba, won 3, lost 3; Saskatchewan, won 2, lost 4; Alberta, won 1, lost 5.

BROOKLYN, Aug. 7.—The St. Louis Cardinals climbed closer to the National League leaders today by a double victory over Brooklyn 6 to 3, and 3 to 0, making it five straight over the Robins. Dazzy Vance, making his first start in almost two weeks, was ineffective and wild in the opening game.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.—The Chicago Cubs made a clean sweep of the series with the Phillies by taking the fourth game of the series, 6-5. A wild throw in the ninth inning allowed Heathcote to score the winning run from second on Grimm's slow roller toward third. It was the Phillie's sixth straight defeat.

CLIFFE TO FIGHT IN OWN BAILIWICK

COURTENAY FANS WILL SEE HOME PRODUCT IN RETURN BOUT WITH BELANGER

Great Interest Raised in View of Result of Last Encounter in Vancouver—Starts Training

CUMBERLAND, Aug. 6.—At the Stadium, Courtenay, on the evening of Saturday, September 4, Roy Cliffe, Vancouver Island's outstanding fighter, will be seen in action in a Canadian light-heavyweight battle against his greatest foeman, Charlie Belanger, of Winnipeg, the fight to be over the ten-round decision route.

Although practically a month away the match is creating more than Canadian interest in fandom, by reason of the talents of the principals and the fact that Cliffe was adjudged loser by a foul last week when they met in Vancouver. It is agreed on all sides that had Cliffe not delivered the unintentional foul blow, he would have won; if not by a knock-out, then at least by a comfortable margin, as he was well in front when the referee stopped the battle and gave his decision to Belanger.

The Winning Bid

Immediately after the bout, endeavors were made to rematch the big boys in Vancouver, but Bert Farrell, Courtenay sportsman, determined to stage a genuine bout in that city, made such a lucrative offer on behalf of himself and associates, that both managers accepted the date.

Despite his prominence in the boxing world, Cliffe has never been seen in action in his home city against an opponent worthy of him, his previous appearances having been against much inferior contenders. Against Belanger, however, Cliffe will require to be at the peak of his form, the Winnipeg man having been offered top-notch matches in the bigger United States boxing centres in the event he gets a clean-cut victory over the Vancouver-Island delegate.

Cliffe arrived in Courtenay on Wednesday and after a few days with his folks will repair to one of the logging camps and engage in stiff work for two weeks, after which he will start his gymnasium training. Belanger has already left for Forbes Landing, and there he will prepare for a battle which has all the earmarks of being the most important ever staged on the island.

Promoter Farrell intends lining up a strong card to support the feature event and in these at least two Cumberland boys will be seen in action.

"MAC" SMITH WINS CANADIAN TITLE

CATCHES JOHNNY FARRELL IN FINAL ROUND PLAYING IN DELUGE OF RAIN

Leo Diegel, Last Year's Champion, Unable to Keep Up With the Pace

MONTREAL, Aug. 7.—Playing the last two rounds in seven strokes under par, Macdonald Smith, professional of the Lakeville Country Club, Great Neck, N.Y., today won the Canadian open golf championship, after a three-day struggle that found a group of stars from the United States fighting it out among themselves all the way. Americans carried off the first six places.

Smith finished the 72-hole title test with a fine aggregate card of 283, equalling or bettering par in successive rounds of 71, 73, 69 and 70. His sensational finish today enabled him to come from behind and beat out two fellow New Yorkers, Johnny Farrell and Gene Sarazen, both of whom went to pieces after leading the field by three strokes at the start of the fourth round this afternoon. A terrific thunderstorm, which Smith just escaped, played a part in the downfall of Sarazen and Farrell, who finished their rounds in 74 and 81 respectively for aggregates of 286 and 291.

Despite his poor finish, Sarazen's score gave him second place, a stroke ahead of Joe Turnesa, young Fairview, N.Y., professional. Leo Diegel, of White Plains, N.Y., who has held the Canadian crown for the past two years, finished fourth with 290, while Farrell wound up in a tie for fifth place with Tom Armour, of Washington.

It was the most decisive sweep invading professionals have ever scored in the tournament and sent the title across the border for the eighth year in a row. The first Canadian on the final list was Charlie Murray, professional at the Royal Montreal Club, where the tournament was played. He landed seventh prise.

Smith's triumph gives him his fourth major open championship. He lifted the Metropolitan open title from Gene Sarazen recently after a record-breaking 54-hole play-off. In addition, he holds the Long Island and Western open championships.

SEABRIGHT TENNIS

Johnston Shows His Old-Time Form —Miss Ryan Takes All the Ladies' Glory

SEABRIGHT, N.J., Aug. 7.—"Little" Bill Johnston, of California, came back today to reclaim his place as one of the most remarkable match players in American tennis.

Driving with all his old power and precision as the doubles partner of the intercollegiate champion, Edward G. Chandler, Johnston was the main factor in an unexpected victory over the national champions, R. Norris Williams and Vincent Richards, 6-3, 1-6, 9-7, 6-1.

The triumph decided one of three doubles finals which featured the closing day's play of the Seabright invitation tournament.

Elizabeth Ryan, of California, who conquered both Mrs. Molla Mallory and Helen Wills, in her march through the women's singles, added to her victories today. In the women's doubles, as partner of Eleanor Goss, of New York, she defeated Mrs. Mallory and Catherine Perter of Philadelphia, 6-1, 6-3, while in the mixed doubles she paired with Cranston Holman, of Stanford University, to triumph over Miss Wills and Chandler, 3-6, 6-3, 6-0.

BEAVER SILVER MINE MAKES GOOD SHOWING

Local Shareholders Receive Qualifying Report on Progress at Property

Reports from the Beaver silver mine, which is located about four miles from Beaverdell, are very favorable. This property, which is controlled almost exclusively in this city, is under the management of Mr. Roy Clothier. Last year about five carloads of ore were shipped from the mine to the Trail smelter, giving good returns.

The latest reports indicate that the upraise from the west drift on No. 1 level at the bottom of the new shaft has been completed through to the drift. At the bottom of the incline shaft ore is now being taken out, and shipments to the Trail smelter will be resumed shortly.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY MEETS ON TUESDAY

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES AGREES TO PROPOSAL TO AMEND CONSTITUTION

M. Poincare Insists Ahat This Is Necessary in Order to Reassure Holders of Securities

PARIS, Aug. 7.—Parliament will go to Versailles on Tuesday with both Houses sitting as a National Assembly and will solemnly put into effect Premier Poincare's bill for assuring autonomy for a commission to control a sinking fund for amortization of France's internal debt and guaranteeing the necessary resources for that fund.

This was apparent when the Chamber early this evening, by a vote of 431 to 313, adopted the Premier's proposal to amend the constitution by vote of the National Assembly at Versailles. The Senate, in which M. Poincare is even stronger than in the Chamber, is certain to follow the lead of the lower House. The vote of confidence given to M. Poincare upon his proposal to convoke the Senate and Chamber in a National Assembly, was followed by a crushing defeat in the Chamber for a Socialist proposal to limit the Senate's powers by another organic law drawn up by the National Assembly. The Socialists and their friends mustered only 180 votes to support the proposal while the Government's forces overwhelmed them with 390.

M. Poincare insisted that the legislators must accord a "solemn character" to the institution of the sinking fund in order to reassure all holders of French securities, whatever their nationality, and said the country must be assured that the sinking fund receipts will not be diverted from the object for which they were intended.

CONCILIATION BOARD PUBLISHES FINDINGS

Majority Report in Winnipeg Street Railway Wage Dispute Is Against Increases

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—Wages paid its employees by the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company "are fair and reasonable for this year."

This is one of the findings in the majority report of the Board of Conciliation which recently investigated the dispute between the railway and its employees. The majority report is signed by Mr. J. H. Lamont, chairman, and Mr. J. B. Coyne, who represented the company.

It was made public today by the Department of Labor, along with a minority report of Mr. J. F. Dixon, representative of the employees on the board. This minority report, "while concurring in the main with the report of the majority, differs on some points, notably wages."

"Employees should receive a substantial increase in wages in order to enable them and their families to enjoy the kind of life to which they are entitled in a community which calls itself civilized," Mr. Dixon recommends.

MEXICAN CONGRESS WILL MEET SHORTLY

Varying Opinions as to Course It Will Follow—Anti-Clericals Continue Campaign

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7.—Special dispatches from Torreon tell of the death of a woman today from injuries received when crowds, made up largely of women, clashed with soldiers and police last Sunday, when a municipal committee was taking over one of the churches. The woman, Senora Josefa Flores, was shot through the lungs. A number of other woman received minor wounds.

About half a dozen Catholic women leaders are being detained in jail on the charge of leading Sunday's demonstration against the Torreon authorities.

Congress Meets Soon

The new Congress, which will be convoked September 1, is looked to in some Catholic circles for a solution of the religious crisis.

Today, the eighth day that the religious regulations have been in effect in Mexico, passed quietly, like the preceding days, with no outward signs of the deadlock being broken.

While in some quarters it is expected that the new Congress will adopt less stringent regulations than those in force, there are some who believe that Congress may affirm its adherence to present regulations. The hope of Congressional modification is based on a Department of the Interior announcement that it will submit to Congress a bill regulating the religious article 130 of the constitution.

The Regional Confederation of Labor and political and other groups supporting the Government's religious policy are continuing their speaking campaigns throughout the country.

Diamond Drill Is Used to Give Air To Entombed Men

PADUCAH, Ky., Aug. 7.—Grimly determined, rescue crews tonight continued their efforts to penetrate the mass of rock and mud that poured into the drift of the Hudson Zinc and Spar Company's Mine last Thursday night, entombing five miners. A crew began work sinking a diamond drill through the roof of the tunnel today through which it is hoped food and air may be piped into the shaft to sustain the miners until the main tunnel can be opened.

While this work goes forward, doubts are being expressed as to whether or not the air line can be completed in time to be of assistance to the men.

OFFICERS ELECTED AT FINAL SESSION

CANADIAN AUTHORS' ASSOCIATION CONCLUDES CONVENTION—TO VISIT VICTORIA

Next Year's Meeting Place Will Probably Be in Maritime Provinces—Choice Left to Executive

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—Dr. W. T. Allison, Winnipeg, was re-elected national president of the Canadian Authors' Association today, the final day of the convention. The national secretary is Prof. Watson Kirkconnell, and the treasurer is Mr. Robert Watson, both of Winnipeg. Hon. Cyrille Deland was chosen president of the French section.

The choice of next year's meeting place was left to the executive, with preference expressed for Halifax or Saint John, N.B.

A committee will be appointed to examine and report on the workings of the Canadian Copyright Act of 1921. The Authors' Association complimented the British Columbia Government on the use of locally written school text books on British Columbia history.

Value of Criticism

Dr. Allison led off in a discussion on "Literary Criticism and Value," and was followed by an address by Mr. W. A. Deacon, Toronto, read in his absence by Mr. Allison Hood, of Vancouver, and by addresses from Mr. John Elson, Winnipeg; Mr. E. Grove, Winnipeg, and Mr. A. M. Stephen, Vancouver.

In the afternoon, delegates were driven up Grouse Mountain.

CANTONESE OPPOSE NEW CHINESE TARIFF

Monster Demonstration to Be Made—Anti-Pekin Party Seeks Senator Borah's Assistance

CANTON, Aug. 7.—The Canton Government today issued a communique calling for a monster demonstration tomorrow against the resumption of the Peking tariff conference. The tariff is viewed by the Government as a special fiscal method of raising war funds for Peking against the Nationalist cause.

The tariff conference recessed July 24 last until after the warm weather. It began October 26, 1925. Announcement was made by Mr. Silas H. Strawn, chief American delegate, that nothing concrete had been accomplished and doubt was expressed that any tangible results would be possible until there was a stronger central governmental authority in China.

Purpose of Conference

The Nationalists opposed the conference throughout and recently cabled to Senator Wm. E. Borah appealing to him to use his influence to have the American delegation recalled.

The purpose of the conference in which the United States and other friendly powers participated was to release Chinese customs duties upward in accordance with treaties, prepare for abolition by China of the Likin, or transit tax on interprovincial trade, and define conditions under which China would be permitted to levy a surtax of 2½ per cent on ordinary imports and five per cent on luxuries in addition, to the five per cent tariff already in force.

There are still some subjects to be announced, Sir Henry Drayton, acting Premier, said today.

SIR HERBERT HOLT ON U.K. PROBLEMS

EMPIRE EMIGRATION AND TARIFF PROTECTION FOR INDUSTRIES NEEDED

Canadian Securities in Good Demand —Plenty of Investment Money Available

MONTREAL, Aug. 7.—Despite the existence of the coal strike and the acute conditions arising out of it, Sir Herbert Holt, who has just returned from England, speaks of the cheerful spirit which he found, and states that at the present time there is plenty of money available in London for good investments. There is a particularly good demand for Canadian securities, and Sir Herbert adds that the unpleasantness created by the G.T.P. debentures affair is gradually being forgotten.

That England will effectively settle her problems, Sir Herbert has no doubt, and he expressed the view that there was little or no likelihood of nationalization of coal mines, seeing rather in amalgamations one aid to the solution of the problem. He remarked on the increasing reaction in many parts of the world to government ownership and suggests that growing participation by employees and consumers in the profits of corporations, through stock ownership, is further strengthening the position of the private enterprise, adding, as it does, to efficient management the satisfactory arrangement of mutual profit-sharing.

England Could Improve Position

Sir Herbert sees two ways in which England at the present time could do a great deal to improve her position. The first, and the one most talked of, is, naturally, Empire emigration, which could effectively take care of Britain's two million surplus population. The next is the question of protection of industries, through the adoption of a sufficiently high tariff barrier. He points to the radical difference in the position of British industry today and at the time of Bright. In those days, England was primarily a manufacturing country, which developed by great bounds under free trade. Today, however, manufacturing has grown to great proportions in many other countries, and it is the intense competition from these countries, particularly those countries of depreciated currency, that is doing much to stifle British industry.

While on this subject, Sir Herbert brought out that Canada is suffering from a condition along the same line. As an example, he pointed to the steel industry in this country, with its lack of protection, resulting in importations far exceeding sales of steel produced in this country.

Canada Does Herself Injustice

Of the pulp and paper industry in this country, Sir Herbert expressed the greatest confidence and pointed to the reception of the Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper offering in London recently, when the issue was over-subscribed thirty times, as an expression of the attitude of the shrewd British investor toward this particular industry. He sees the industry on such a sound basis as could hardly be much disturbed by any temporary period of overproduction, which might arise from the expansion by many companies in the way of installations of new machines, so far, however, the growing consumption, particularly in the United States, has easily taken care of the increased production.

Canada's strength in this industry lies, of course, in her forest resources and Sir Herbert is strongly of the opinion that Canada does herself a grave injustice by not adopting an embargo on these resources even granting that quite rapidly the mills of the United States are moving to this country.

Cowslip Holds 258 Blooms on Single Stem

LONDON, Aug. 6.—What is described locally as the most wonderful cowslip ever seen in the countryside has been found by some children growing on their father's farm at Wistow Common, near Selby, in Yorkshire.

The stem of the flower was over half an inch thick, and the cluster of flowers at the top of the stem measuring six inches across, resembled a sunflower.

It was found that there were 258 separate blooms on the stem.

Chess Notes and News

Jose R. Capablanca, exhibiting simultaneously at the Hotel Alamac, New York, scored, as far as is known, the highest percentage of victories on record, when out of forty-three games he won forty-two and drew one, to a twelve-year-old child, Marion Murray, who shows much aptitude for the game, and is under the tutelage of the American champion, F. J. Marshall.

The surprise of the Lake Hopatcong tourney came not in Capablanca's winning first prize, but in the poor showing of Marshall, whose only real consolation was his drawing both games with the world's champion.

As Pillsbury always had great difficulty against Blackburne, so does Marshall when pitted against Marocezy, and this meeting proved no exception, as the Hungarian won and drew with the American. In cable and tourney games eleven very tough struggles between Blackburne and Pillsbury resulted in the veteran winning five to three losses and three draws.

Carlos Torre recently won the Mexican championship and a match for the United States championship is expected. Boston papers say his opponent will have to be in his best form.

Belgium will have an international tourney at Ghent, beginning October 23. Invitations to play have been accepted by Colle, Janowski, Sir Geo. Thomas and Yates.

A brass memorial plate will be affixed to the monument of Lowenthal and a wreath (already mentioned) placed on his grave on the fiftieth anniversary of the death of the gifted Hungarian by the British Chess Federation.

Morphy's gift of £120 of furniture to his opponent was followed by paying the expenses of Andersen to Paris with the stakes he won in his match with Harrwitz. The generosity of the Southerner deserves the everlasting grateful remembrance of posterity, for both he and Andersen were players of rare imaginative gifts and their play has never been paralleled for brilliancy of style, beauty of conception and depth of design.

In Paris princes called at Morphy's hotel, and his secretary, speaking at the London Chess Club, told of his playing Napoleon III at the Tuileries palace. After losing six games, the Emperor took from his finger a magnificent ring, and pressing it on Morphy's finger, said: "I know of your unwillingness to accept money, but please accept this ring in token of my esteem." The secretary asked Morphy why he did not let his opponent win a game. "I could instinctively divine he was too intelligent a man to care for such flattery," said the chess king. He estimated the strength of the Emperor's play to be of the knight class.

Famous Dunmow Flitch of Bacon Won By Pair of Couples

LONDON, Aug. 6.—In following wig and scarlet gown, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., sat recently in the judge's chair at the Court of Love, Ilford, to decide the merits of the claimants for the Dunmow Flitch. Behind him, on the bench, hung two flitches of decorated bacon, and beside him sat a jury of six bachelors and six maidens.

At the end of the trial he remarked that if, after hearing such a lot about love and matrimony, the jurymen bachelors lost the opportunity of falling in love with such charming jurywomen, it would be entirely their own fault. The court applauded very heartily, but the members of the jury only looked abashed.

Although three married couples had intimated their intention of claiming the flitch, only two faced the crowded audience in the marquee. The conditions of winning the flitch are that the couple must have lived in complete harmony for a year and a day and not wished themselves unwed. When the first pair of claimants entered the box they were surrounded by six bonny girls and boys. They were Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Randolph Wood, of Clarissa Road, Chadwell Heath-Essex.

Replying to their counsel, Mr. Wood, who is forty-four, stated that his married life had been one of complete happiness. Then Mr. and Mrs. Arnold, of Wentworth-Road, Manor Park, E., went into the witness box. Mr. Arnold is a retired lithographic artist, and is eighty. His wife caused considerable amusement when she nudged him in the side and had to ask him the date of their marriage. He told the court it was fifty years ago. He was then asked if he ever wished himself unwed, and he replied "only once"

Forty-five years ago he attended a meeting at Islington on Home Rule, at which the speakers were Mr. Sexton and Mr. T. P. O'Connor, and when he got home his wife, who was an Irishwoman, refused to think as he did on the matter. There was much laughter at this, in which the judge joined. The judge declared that, in his opinion, both sets of claimants deserved the bacon.

The jury acted upon his advice, and awarded the prize to Mr. and Mrs. Wood, and also to Mr. and Mrs. Arnold. The two couples then knelt upon the original kneeling stones which were used at Dunmow, and, having made a declaration, received the bacon.

COAL PRODUCTION IN PROVINCE DECLINES

First Six Months Period of Year Falls Behind Last Year—June Showing on Island Improves

Coal production in British Columbia for the six months ended June 30 showed a decline of 112,759 long tons under the total output in the same period in 1925, according to figures made public by Hon. William Sloan, Minister of Mines. The aggregate output by all collieries in the Province was 1,062,343 long tons, as compared with 1,175,102 tons in 1925. The conditions which in the early months of the year affected production, namely, competition of fuel oil and quietness in demand, continue to be the main factors for the falling off in production.

On Vancouver Island a total of 576,003 tons were mined in the six months period compared with 657,287 tons in 1925, a falling off of 81,284 tons. It is to be noted that while other producing concerns show declines in production, the Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir), Limited, exceeded the output in the first six months of 1925 by 8,091 tons. In fact, of all the companies operating in B.C. the Canadian Collieries is the only one to run ahead of last year's output. The shutting down of the Wakesiah mine of the Western Fuel Corporation, Ltd., has curtailed output by that company, which is 35,987 tons behind the 1925 figure.

Island Collieries' Showing

For Vancouver Island district of the Province the production for the first half of the year 1926, as compared with the same period of 1925 by the various collieries, was as follows:

For the six months' period of 1925 the Nicola-Princeton collieries showed a slight increase over 1925, the figures being 79,676, as against 77,210, but in the Crow's Nest Pass district the aggregate output of the Coal Creek, Michel, and Corbin collieries fell off 32,691 tons, this year's output being 405,914, compared with 438,605 tons in the first half of 1925.

JAIL IN MYSORE, INDIA, IS MODEL INSTITUTION

Administration Is Conducive to Reformation of the Criminal—Few Old Offenders Return

The prison administration in Mysore—generally recognized as one of the most progressive native states in India—is perhaps the best in the country, it being conducive to the reformation of the criminal, the primary goal of all prison reform, says a dispatch from Bombay in The Christian Science Monitor.

Every one of the criminals admitted to the Bangalore Central Jail, which is also known as the "House of Discipline," is taught some art or craft suited to his intelligence and ordinary habits, so that when he leaves he may have some honest way of making a livelihood. That the results of this policy are satisfactory in most cases is borne out by the fact that only a very small fraction of the old offenders are found to return to jail.

For juveniles there is a regular drill to improve their physique, and lay teachers are also employed to instruct them. Lectures on temperance and the evils of drinking, and religious and moral discourses in different vernaculars are regularly held. The adult criminals are taught some sort of industry, each one being allowed to choose his own. For instance, cloth weaving and carpentry are taught, and there are also sewing machines for tailors, and workshops for gold and silversmiths.

One other remarkable feature about the institution is that rewards are offered for industry and good conduct.

A library is provided for the literate prisoners, and these are allowed to teach their illiterate fellow convicts during their leisure hours. Patient and sympathetic consideration is given to the complaints and grievances of prisoners, and they are allowed to write appeals to the authorities either to remit or reduce the sentences passed on them. It is said that the superintendent of the jail, by his love and sympathy has won the affections of all, even the most desperate criminals.

Auction Bridge Analyzed

By WYNNE FERGUSON

Author of the Authoritative Book, "Auction Bridge for 1926."

Best Results Can Be Obtained by Considering a Double After Partner Has Bid as Business Double

The other evening the writer had the pleasure of playing at one of the New York card clubs where the informatory double is not recognized nor played. After the game was over there was a spirited discussion as to the merits and demerits of the informatory double. Most of the objections were based on specific instances where the use of the informatory double was disastrous, but upon analysis every one of these cases proved only that the player in fault had used the informatory double without a proper understanding of what he was doing. First understand what you are doing and then if you don't get good results give up the theory, but it is hardly fair to condemn anything without a fair trial.

For years the English refused to try out the informatory double, but during the last year they have finally capitulated and now think it is the greatest addition to the game since its inception. The following hands are examples of the problems the English are meeting in their study of the informatory double and should prove interesting and instructive.

Y

h—9
c—K J 8 2
d—K Q 3
s—J 9 8 5 4

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade. If A doubled one spade (informatory) and Y passed, what should B bid? He has a choice of two clubs or one no trump. B should undoubtedly bid one no trump, in preference to two clubs. The no trump bid offers a better chance for game and is sound because A-B between them should have at least a double stopper in the spade suit. Some players may think that the one spade bid should be passed by B in the hope that the bid can be defeated, but such practice is unsound.

It is surprising how often a suit bid of one is made, due to a singleton or void suit in the dummy, when the opponents have most of the high cards, so be careful about trying to defeat a suit bid of one. Wait until they bid two or three before doubling with the type of hand held by B in this problem.

Z

h—K 7 6 2
c—A Q 10
d—K Q 4 3
s—K 6

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no trump, A doubled, Y passed and B bid two spades. If Z passed, what should A bid? Should he pass or bid two no trump. A should pass and not even consider a two no trump bid. Such a bid may get him into serious trouble. In the first place A's informatory double is unsound because he isn't prepared for the spade bid, either to properly assist the bid, if made, or to bid no trump over such a bid. For that reason A should have passed one no trump. Don't make an informatory double unless prepared for any bid partner may make in answer to the double. Such a double only gets you and your partner into hot water.

By "prepared for any bid" is meant either help for any bid or a hand of such a type that another bid may be made if partner bids the weak suit. In this example hand A over-bid two spades with two no trump, was doubled and lost 500 points. It is such bidding that gets the informatory double in disrepute, but the fault is not with the informatory double but with the misuse of it.

Z

h—10 9 8
c—A K Q 4
d—7 3
s—K 10 4 2

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one club, A bid one spade, Y doubled and B passed. What should Z bid? Should he regard the double of one spade as informatory or as a business double? In either case, what should he do? Such a double is a business double and shows that B thinks he can defeat the one spade bid. Any double made by a player after his partner has bid is a business double and intended to defeat the contract.

In this instance it looks as if A is in bad, so Z is in the happy position of choosing between a big penalty or a sure game and rubber at no trump. The state of the score would have some bearing, but the writer would be inclined to let the double stand and try for the penalty. There is a difference of opinion on this point. Some players, the English in particular, argue that any double of a bid of one is informatory, whether or not partner has bid, but such a view seems unsound. The best results will undoubtedly be obtained by following the writer's viewpoint.

Z

h—K 7 3
c—Q J 10 9 7
d—9 7
s—8 5 2

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one no trump. A and Y passed and B bid two spades. If Z bid two no trump and all passed, what should A open? Should he lead his partner's spade suit or take a chance on his own club suit?

A should open the eight of spades. The club opening is tempting and should be made if A held less than three spades, but not otherwise. B bid spades for one of two reasons, either to play the hand at spades if he won the bid or to have that suit let if Z bid two no trump. For that reason A should play a partnership game and follow B's more or less explicit directions; that is, to lead spades.

Z

h—K Q 10 9 8 4

s—10 8 4 3 2

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one heart (a questionable bid). A bid one spade, Y two diamonds and B two spades. Z and A passed and Y bid three hearts. B and Z passed and A bid three spades, Y bid four diamonds, B passed and Z bid four hearts. All passed and A opened the king of clubs and all followed suit. A then led the seven of hearts. How should Z plan the play of the hand?

Z should take six rounds of hearts, trying to coax a diamond discard, if possible. In any event, he should then lead the queen of diamonds and overtake in the dummy with the king. He should then lead the ace and if the jack of diamonds is only guarded once, Z will make the balance of the tricks. It is bad play for Z to try and cross-ruff the hand. By so doing he cannot make more than three odd unless the diamonds break and he has given up valuable information. By leading out six rounds of trumps he makes his opponents guess as to what cards to hold and in this way may force one or more diamond discards. In any event he must boldly try for game for there is no other way unless the diamonds fall as indicated.

Canon Says Women Less Religious Than Men

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Canon Marquis of Normandy, the only marquis in holy order, says women are not as religious as men.

"Women have grown worse in the last fifty years, while the attitude of men toward religion has improved," declared the canon, who is still preaching although he is eighty years old. "I think many modern women have too material and artificial an outlook on life—perhaps it is the reaction from their greater freedom."

The venerable canon says the great need of the established church in England is more vigorous men in its pulpits, and he urges the laity to assist the church in paying better salaries. He says parsons cannot support families on $1,000 a year.

"Caught in the Acts, by thunder!" said the fly, as the family Bible was shut suddenly.

Beautiful Gardens of Victoria

By G. E. ALTREE COLEY.

NUMBER IV.

In the development of any local art there is a point reached when it ceases to be a mere reflection of the general practice and takes on an individuality and local coloring that gives it real value, and a distinctive quality of originality, that, while eluding those who definitely pursue it, bestows itself upon those who work in harmony with nature, using the materials at hand with sympathetic appreciation. In this way we have distinct national schools of painting, the Dutch and English being as valuable as the French and Italian in their expression of national characteristics. The clays of different localities have given us the varied charms of different styles of pottery, each piquantly interpreting in local terms the general art of ceramics. Similarly it may be said without exaggeration that the garden art of Victoria has arrived at the stage where it is pursuing its own destiny and is creating a charm all its own.

Individuality

The conditions that have fostered this enviable development are the climate that permits of garden activities throughout the year and the picturesquely diversified nature of her topography. The rocky outcroppings found everywhere, so far from discouraging the practice of gardening, lend a character and vigor that in contrast with the luxuriant foliage and wealth of color creates pictures that cannot be surpassed the world over. A few gardens chosen from many will illustrate this statement.

The most notable instance in combining a warm appreciation of the purple grandeur of the rocks with a gallant defiance of the difficulties they offer is the garden of Mr. David Spencer. This place of three acres, is literally set upon a rock, and Mrs. Spencer, to whose ardent enthusiasm the designing of the garden is due, recalls that she was warned by everyone that it was impossible to expect to have a garden on so starkly rugged a site. This was all the more significant, as Victoria gardeners are well accustomed to dealing with rock to a certain extent and are not easily daunted by it. The triumphant answer to all these warnings may be seen today in rose-wreathed battlements, terraces ablaze with zinnias and petunias, shady dells carpeted with the finest turf, pretty pools, and an infinite variety of nooks and rocky knolls that offer a congenial home for a host of dainty alpines.

Famous Bougainvilleas In Open

Naturally this wealth of bloom and leaf could not have been possible without the previous preparation of bringing up quantities of soil, and the continuous supply of life-giving water. Even this is subject to difficulties not experienced by most gardeners in the city, for the high location decreases the force of the supply so seriously as to need the auxiliary of a special electric pumping plant. But with these problems solved, the result is wholly a delight, and it is especially noteworthy that there is considerable compensation in the marked earliness of the Spring flowers that bask in the reflected warmth of the rocks. This may be judged from the fact that the tropical bougainvillea has been safely wintered out.

Beautiful too are the effects gained by the use of a rocky site in the garden of Mr. Harry Ross, on Runnymede Avenue. Here the whole garden with the exception of the tennis lawn and vegetable garden is on a rocky hillside, and so happy is the effect that the visitor may well go home mourning his own level site. Under the windows of the house is a paved garden, the flags, it is interesting to know, being part of the paving originally used around the old Parliament Buildings and here gentians, French lavender and giant thrift flourish with the lowlier plants in the cracks and chinks. Steps and slopes lead down between cascades of valerian, silene, and nepeta, that in early Summer make a riot of rosy pinks and mauve. Then a winding grass path will skirt round a shoulder of the rock to reveal a wealth of clarkia and larkspur. Most of these things are self-sown, apparently delighting in rooting in the warm gritty crevices. On the lower levels some imported soil affords root-room for peonies, while the various dells that rocks have a fascinating way of forming are filled with Japanese iris or alpine primulas. Considerable use is made of such evergreens as retinosporas and as if to emphasize the value of these trees in rock gardens, a native white pine twisted and broken by some past snowfall now spreads over a rocky slope exactly as in some Japanese picture. Hollies are also used in this extensive garden, and with cotoneasters and various berberises keep the landscape bright, even in Winter.

Noted Alpine Gardens

But the presence of rock in Victoria gardens has also been responsible for a distinct departure that is shown in the unusual popularity of alpines. In the examples just quoted the grounds are so extensive as to require large treatment involving the use of the usual denizens of the garden. In smaller places a rock outcropping has been the stimulus for collecting those gems of high altitudes, known as alpines, and the art has developed here to such an extent that there are several nurseries devoted to importing and growing these plants. The rock garden at the Angela, owned by Mr. Rant, is a well-known example of this type, while Mr. J. Hutchison, beginning the work as a hobby, has recently extended it to a large commercial enterprise. A grower who has distinguished himself not only by his collection of imported alpines, but also by his interest in Canadian mountain flora, is Mr. J. C. Bennett, whose place has several times been visited by Lady Byng, whose enthusiasm for our native flowers is well known. Here may be seen pygmy rhododendrons only a few inches high, from Mount Arrowsmith, lovely alpine penstemons from the mainland and similar treasures brought from all over the Province. The growing of rock plants, has, in fact, become one of Victoria's industries, the plants being sent in thousands all over the Dominion, to lovers of this charming form of garden art.

Among the many fine private alpine gardens, that of Mrs. B. Wilson, on Rockland Avenue, is notable for its sincere truth to nature and artistic design. Adapting a natural slope in the grounds, the rock garden is traversed by winding paths and easy rock slopes. There is no attempt at such details as miniature pools; instead there is a breadth and simplicity that recalls the flower-gemmed folds of some noble mountain slope. The example of this dignified restraint, which is true art, is all the more valuable since the very materials of rock gardening, the miniature plants themselves, tend very often to encourage a multiplicity of small features that make this form of garden something of a plaything rather than an artistic interpretation of nature. Here there are gently-swelling ridges, where the arenarias and gypsophilla repens drape the half-sunk boulders, while in the little valleys, primulas nestle, including the lovely Juliae variety. Here also one may see the remarkable effect of space and good composition that is supplied by the use of small evergreens and small trailing shrubs, such as cotoneaster adpressa, microphylla and glacialis, and the beautiful little daphnes. It is worthy of remark, and will doubtless encourage others who are contemplating the addition of an alpine garden to their grounds, that this garden was designed solely by Mrs. Wilson, and carried out by her gardener, under her supervision.

Service of Unrewarded Pioneer now Recognized

John McLean, Who Saved Western Canada for the British Empire by His Strong Appeals, Receives Posthumous Fame for His Life of Service

Preparations for an important expedition sent out this Summer for the investigation of the power possibilities of McLean's Falls on the Hamilton River, Ungava, Canada's cataract, brought to light the life story of John McLean, the discoverer of the falls and one of the most important if one of the least recognized figures in Canadian history.

John McLean's claim to celebrity is based upon the tremendous fact that he saved Western Canada to the British Empire. This sweeping statement is backed by historic documents and personal records, and the story is one of those romantic and pathetic instances of unrewarded worth. However, a posthumous recognition is now coming to John McLean, and his name is figuring largely in many papers of Eastern Canada as the discoverer of the great cataract and the saviour of the Northwest.

He was born on the Isle of Mull in the year 1800, and at the age of twenty-one entered the services of the Hudson's Bay Company at Montreal. For many years he served at different posts around the Ottawa River, but was later moved about from remote corner to remote corner in the unknown West.

Praises Peace River Country

In this manner he became familiar with vast stretches of country from the Pacific to the Atlantic Coast, and recognized their potential value to the Empire. Of the Peace River country he was incessant in his praises, and his prophecies of its great productiveness are being splendidly fulfilled.

Mr. McLean's opportunity of doing his country an estimable service arose in the year 1869, when the United States claimed damages from Great Britain for Civil War losses. The British Government, ignorant of the sacrifice it was making, was prepared to surrender all the unknown country west of Lake Superior. This catastrophe was averted by the intervention of John McLean, whose violent protests and zealous publicity through the press won the attention of the Dominion Government.

Government Takes Notice

He had at this time been living at Elora for some years, having resigned from the Hudson's Bay Company's services in the year 1846. During his residence in Elora he had written often and strenuously to Canadian newspapers stressing the value of the Northwest for settlement. But at the crisis in 1869, with the fear of having all his campaigning go for nothing and of seeing all his dreams for Canada's great prosperity crumble to dust, he redoubled his efforts and was so emphatic in his protests and explanations that the Government decided to secure the land, which it did about April, 1869.

All matters relative to this episode were not finally settled until as late as the beginning of last year.

Following are the closing paragraphs of one of John McLean's effective epistles:

"Ere I conclude, I would submit that the foregoing remarks are founded on personal observation. I have visited every part of the territory which I have attempted to describe and therefore know whereof I speak. I began to write on this subject about nineteen years ago, when the people of Canada knew little of the North-West territory, and cared less. The value of the territory is now perfectly understood, and it affords me no small satisfaction to find that all who have visited the country since, noblemen, clergymen, men of science, officers of the army and navy, have confirmed my report in every particular.

"In my former correspondence with the press I generally wrote over the signature of "Viator," but I see no reason why I should retain my incognito any longer, and therefore subscribe myself."

JOHN McLEAN.

Cataract is Discovered

The great falls were discovered in the year 1839. In 1837 Mr. McLean journeyed from British Columbia to Ungava, taking eight months to do the trip. He was then stationed for several months at Fort Chimo in Labrador. In 1839 he and four companions went by canoe up the Hamilton River in an endeavor to find a communication route from north to south, across the country. During this journey they suffered terrific hardships, but were rewarded by the discovery of the cataract.

The description of the falls is best made in Mr. McLean's own words:

"One evening the roar of a mighty cataract burst on our ears. We soon reached the spot, which presented to us one of the grandest spectacles in the world. About six miles above the falls the river suddenly contracts from a width of 600 to 400 yards, again to 100 yards, and finally to fifty yards, ere it precipitates itself over the rock which forms the falls. Still roaring and foaming, it continues its maddened course for a distance of about thirty miles pent up between walls of rock which rise sometimes to the height of 300 feet on either side."

The water tumbled into the abyss below with such extraordinary force that Mr. McLean and his companions, standing 200 feet above the gulf, felt the rock shake under their feet.

Falls Heard for Miles

In describing these magnificent falls, Mr. A. P. Low, Canadian Geologist, says: "The noise of the fall has a stunning effect, and though deadened because of its enclosed situation, can be heard for more than ten miles away, as a deep, booming sound. The cloud of mist is also visible from any eminence within a radius of thirty miles."

It is said that as the flow of the river is comparable to that of the Ottawa River in Ottawa, it would, if harnessed, furnish sufficient power to transmit electricity to any distance without the use of wires, thus being an inestimable boon to the Dominion.

This new interest in the gigantic cataract brings to the name of McLean a much-deserved and long-deferred publicity, and should help to place one of Canada's best and truest servants in his rightful niche in the "Hall of Fame." The story of this great pioneer has a distinct local interest, as some of the children and grandchildren of John McLean are well known residents of Victoria and Vancouver.

Son: "Boo! Hoo! Wh-Where do you—sniff—think my mind is?"

Facts

of the Brewing Industry in British Columbia

THE Brewing Industry of British Columbia employs hundreds of men with an annual payroll of about three-quarters of a million dollars, using per annum nearly ten million pounds of malt, made from barley grown in Canada, and over one hundred and fifty thousand pounds of hops produced in British Columbia.

IT requires over one hundred thousand dollars for fuel, mined in British Columbia, to produce the Beer consumed in this province. Many hundreds of thousands of dollars are paid by the Brewers annually for materials such as bottles, cooperage, crownstoppers, labels and bottle wrappers—all of which are manufactured in Canada.

THE taxes paid by the Breweries to the Government amount to over eight hundred and seventy thousand dollars per annum, exclusive of income taxes.

THE citizens of this province must recognize the importance of such an industry and help to build it up; payrolls and industries are building cities and are the foundation of prosperity.

THE Amalgamated Breweries of B. C. are manufacturing good Beers, fully matured and aged, a product recommended by physicians on account of its nourishing and health-giving qualities; these beers contain only a very low percentage of alcohol and therefore are the proper stimulant needed when exhausted or overworked, as recognized by medical authorities.

THE Vancouver Brewery Limited, Rainier Brewing Co. of Canada Limited, Westminster Brewery Limited, Silver Spring Brewery Limited and the Victoria Phoenix Brewing Co. Limited, members of the Amalgamated Breweries of B. C., are under supervision of the Liquor Control Board, and their Beers are analyzed from time to time by expert firms of the continent upon instigation of the Liquor Control Board, which gives ample assurance to the public that they receive only pure and wholesome Beers when bought either in the Government Vendor Store or in licensed beer parlors.

GENERAL MOTOR STOCK IS STILL SENSATION

Gain of More Than Nine Points Lifts It to 217—Rapid Advance in High-Priced Specialties

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Another sensational outburst of buying in General Motors, which soared 9⅜ points to a new record high for all time at 217, featured the resumption of the upward movement in today's stock market. At the close the average of twenty leading industrial issues was within half a point of the highest level ever recorded, while the average of twenty leading rails was at the highest point since 1913.

Brokerage houses reported a further expansion in public participation, which was borne out by the broadening demand for stocks. Except for the publication of a few semi-annual earning statements, which compared favorably with those of the same period last year, there were no new developments to account for the brisk demand for stocks which appeared to reflect growing speculative belief that current prosperity in most lines would carry through until the end of the year.

Pools again were active in some of the low priced industriale.

The rapid advance in several of the high priced specialties indicated a scarcity in the floating supply., Air Reduction was bid up 10½ points to 133; Dupont jumped nearly 10 points to 304¾, and American Linseed, American Radiator and Loos-Wiles Biscuit showed net gains of 3 to 5 points.

Rails were not as active as the industrials, although Atchison, N.Y. Central and Southern Railway all mounted to new high prices for the year.

The principal commodity markets lost ground. Trading continued dull in today's short session of the bond market. Foreign issues again held the spotlight, with French, Belgian, German, Polish and Italian all registering gains.

French 8's were up 1⅛, and the ⅛'s and 7's rose ⅝ and ⅛ respectively.

WEAKNESS AGAIN FEATURED IN WHEAT

Lack of Buying Causes Prices at Winnipeg Closing to Be Somewhat Lower

WINNIPEG, Aug. 7. — Further weakness was displayed on the wheat market today. Lack of buying power weakened the price and it closed 1 3-8 lower. No demands of importance were forthcoming. October closed 140 1-2, December 132-3-8 and May 143 3-8. The market opened at 1-8c to 2-4c lower, but held firm during the first hour's trading. A New York house unloaded some long wheat and the market broke another cent very quickly.

The dull tone continued with the coarse grain market. Oats and barley held firm with prices little changed. The cash grain market continued to mark time, trade being small today.

Vulcan drillers were awaiting the arrival of the new fishing socket yesterday. This was to have been completed in Calgary at midnight. At the Midland well the crew yesterday closed the control heads in an effort to thaw out the frozen limestone particles through accumulated pressure of unreleased gas. The Urban well being drilled near Coutts was reported last night to have had its derrick and boiler house destroyed by fire.

Chicago Grain

(Supplied by B.C. Bond Corpn., Ltd.)

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Wheat: The market was unsettled, with erratic changes. Houses with Eastern connections were fair sellers, but the breaks brought in fair buying and the inside figures were not maintained. Trade was fairly active at times. There was an improvement in the export bids for cash grain both here and in the Southwest, but the seaboard failed to report any business of consequence. There were reports of improved crop conditions in the Canadian Northwest, where temperatures were lower and quite cool. Cooler weather is predicted in northern districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta, with scattered showers. Liverpool closed ⅝d lower. Milling demand for cash wheat in leading markets was fairly good and reports from the southwest indicated flour business was active.

Corn: Averaged somewhat lower on lower temperatures over the belt and forecast for probable showers in Kansas and Nebraska. The latter two states acnt in claims of crop deterioration as a result of recent hot and dry weather and a good soaking rain would be highly beneficial over a wide area. Cash demand is only fair. Warehouse receipts for around 500,000 bushels were reported cancelled here during the past week. The September and December spread widened somewhat.

Oats: Dull and averaged lower, with hedging pressure a factor.

Winnipeg Grain Letter

(Supplied by R. P. Clark & Co., Ltd.)

WINNIPEG, Aug. 7.—Wheat: The market lost further ground today, closing not far from the bottom and showing a loss of 1⅜ in all positions. There was scattered liquidation of long wheat going on and a little hedging pressure was noticed while the buying power was poor and prices undoubtedly would have suffered more severely had it not been for the steadiness in American markets. Liverpool was again easy, opening and closing ⅝d lower. There was a little early business, some export business in both wheat and flour being confirmed, which held the market steady after a little lower opening, but after the buying against this business was satisfied and a little averaging up by shorts over the week-end, there was not much doing, the trade being largely technical and confined to spreading between the different months, selling October and buying December at two cents difference. A few showers only were received in the West, with the weather mostly fair and cool, which is very favorable. The forecast is for mostly fair over the districts. Harvesting of wheat is now started in the West and will be general in another week so that the crop can be considered made and hedging pressure will soon be felt. Export business is very ordinary and must broaden out considerably if present levels are to be held. With new wheat commencing to come on the market, cash traders are showing little interest in the old crop wheat, the demand being for odd cars only, although spreads on the contract grades showed a little improvement, supplies being strongly held.

Coarse Grains: Dull, featureless markets with very little going on. Oats and barley held steady at prices little changed, while rye declined 1¼ cents.

Flax: Easier, final figures being 1¼ lower; trade very light.

LORD ROTHERMERE MAKES PREDICTION

RADICAL REVISION OF ALL WAR DEBT SETTLEMENTS WILL EVENTUALLY BE MADE

Creditor Countries Will Find This Necessary in Own Interests—Debt Payments Hamper Trade

LONDON, Aug. 7.—A radical revision of all the war debt settlements and the steady growth of tariff walls in most countries, including Great Britain, are foreseen by Lord Rothermere, well known British publisher, in an article appearing in The Sunday Pictorial.

Asserting that Anglo-American amity is essential for the world peace, Lord Rothermere disclaims personal responsibility for recent articles in his paper, The Daily Mail, which characterized the United States as playing the part of Shylock.

Although Lord Rothermere thinks the United States is in no way to blame for the "onerous terms" of the settlement made with Great Britain in 1923, he gravely doubts whether the continued payments of immense sums by debtor nations will in the long run be advisable.

By General Consent

"My own belief is that by general consent there will, in a few years, be a radical revision of all the debt settlements whether with the United States, Great Britain, or any of the Allies," writes Lord Rothermere. "It will be undertaken by the United States and Great Britain in their own interests. They are as at present constituted an active contribution toward the destruction of international trade. Already it is evident that Continental countries with low currencies are being forced to protect themselves behind prohibitive protective barriers."

MAINLAND RECLUSE BUILDS FUNERAL PYRE

Arrival of Police Prevents Mount Lehman Man From Touching Off Pile on Which He Lay

MOUNT LEHMAN, B.C., Aug. 7.—With his funeral pyre prepared and his house in order, R. L. Milner, seventy-two-year-old recluse, was prevented from burning himself to death here yesterday. The arrival of Provincial police prevented the old man from touching off the pile of wood on which he was lying.

"I wanted to die," police say he told them. "I'm only a nuisance to my neighbors and a charge on the world."

Police say Milner said he selected cremation as the most suitable form of suicide, because it did away with all necessity of a funeral. "I wanted to be of as little bother as possible," he asserted. It was found that the man had cleaned and scrubbed his house and meant to leave everything in perfect order.

Milner is a United States citizen, and has no relatives in this country. He was taken in custody by the Provincial police.

STRAWBERRIES OBTAIN QUICK SALE AT MARKET

Small Quantity of Second Crop and Everbearing Varieties at City Market Yesterday

Strawberries in a small quantity made their appearance at the City Market yesterday, and were soon snapped up by the bargain seekers. A few second crop berries brought twenty-five cents a basket, while the everbearing varieties were sold at twenty cents a basket, or two for thirty-five. Business in all departments was reported brisk.

Bartlett pears in their first appearance were selling at ten cents per pound. Spinach found an early market, and was soon sold out, bringing ten cents per pound. Greenhouse tomatoes were plentiful and held their own, with no change in prices. Outside tomatoes were on sale today at ten cents per pound for their first appearance. Blackberries were very plentiful, and were selling at five cents a basket. These berries have past their peak, and it is expected will be shortly off the market. The wonder bean, which is stringless, is in great demand and was snapped up early.

Cucumbers were selling at five and ten cents each. Greengages were bringing ten cents a pound and yellow plums were selling at two pounds for twenty-five cents. Early pears sold at six pounds for twenty-five cents. Begonias, which made the best display seen here for some time, were selling at one dollar for the large plants and forty cents for the small ones.

No change was noticed in the price of eggs and meat.

Fire-Crazed Bear Mauls Two Nicola Valley Men

MERRITT, B.C., Aug. 7.—Two man named Proudfoot and Dilcher, who were attacked by a black bear apparently crazed by forest fires while they were fighting a blaze in the Nicola Valley woods near Chaperon Lake last Thursday, lay in hospital here today so seriously injured that they are not expected to recover. They were packed to Merritt on stretchers for twelve miles over rough mountain trails.

Proudfoot was seized by the thigh, thrown and badly mauled before Dilcher rushed to his rescue and struck the beast on the head with a shovel. This action drew the bear's onslaught, and Dilcher was grabbed by the shoulder and hurled to the ground with stunning force.

First aid was given Proudfoot and Dilcher, but it was hours before a doctor arrived to attend them.

PALESTINE DECLARED TO BE GOING AHEAD

Country Enjoying Peace and Prosperity, Says Preacher Representing British Jews' Society

TORONTO, Aug. 6.—Emphasizing the great interest attached to Palestine today, the Rev. S. B. Rohold, representing the British Jews' Society for the Propagation of the Goapel, preaching in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Bloor Street, spoke upon seven signs of Palestinian development. In the development of agriculture waste lands had been reclaimed, responding to implements and husbandry to a remarkable degree. The prophecy "a highway from Egypt to Assyria" had found fulfilment in the improvement of travel conditions, he claimed, and journeys which formerly occupied some days were now accomplished in a short time.

A religious sign of development was represented in archaeological discoveries and in the new era of development 110 colonies had been established. A great political change had been wrought in Palestine, claimed the Rev. Mr. Rohold, stating that until recently the British had not been popular in Palestine. Much had been achieved under Sir Herbert Samuels, he declared, with the people lamenting his leave-taking from Palestine. In the military sign there had been noted on outstanding development; while formerly under military rule 7,000 soldiers had been employed, now only 400 soldiers were necessary to keep order. Exercising self-government, Palestine was enjoying peace and prosperity, said Mr. Rohold. Commercialism had forged ahead, with manufacturing prominent, he stated, which was a mercantile sign of development.

Formerly the people spoke Yiddish, but now they have returned to the pure Hebrew, and the linguistic gifts of Palestine were rapidly developing. Perhaps the most remarkable sign of Palestinian development, said Mr. Rohold, was the spiritual, with many of the Jews reading and circulating not only the Old Testament, but the New Testement as well. Many thousands of copies of the Life of Christ had also been sold in Palestine, he claimed.

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—Fears that J. Nelson, of Chilliwack, missing for several weeks, and whose cap and blankets were found on a Fraser River wharf near New Westminster, has been drowned, were expressed to the police here today by his wife, who asked that a search be instituted for him.

Electric and Rain Storm

TORONTO, Aug. 7.—Western and Central Ontario were visited by an electric storm and heavy rainfall which did some damage to standing grains, but at the same time was of great benefit to root crops. The downpour was accompanied by a high wind and brilliant flashes of lightning. Telegraph and telephone services were interrupted.

Saved Baby's Life

INGLEWOOD, Cal., Aug. 7.—The presence of mind of Mrs. E. C. Berry, who tossed her three-months-old baby out of her automobile when she saw that she could not avoid a collision with another machine saved the child from possible serious injury. The baby landed unhurt in the soft dirt on the edge of a field. The mother suffered several broken ribs and internal injuries while another woman occupant was badly bruised on the face by flying glass.

Vancouver Visitor's Fall

VANCOUVER, Aug. 7.—Failing to the pavement from the third story of a local hotel, Engled Nelson, an exhibition visitor, was removed to the hospital early this morning suffering scalp wounds and shock. He is expected to recover. According to Nelson's friends he retired feeling indisposed. It is believed that he awoke in a doze and staggered to an open window, mistaking it for a door of the room.

English Slums Illustrate Value of the Leisure Hour

Potentialities in Proper Use of Spare Time Shown by Progress Made in City Area—Handicrafts Embrace Creative Work of Many Kinds

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Principal L. P. Jacks, speaking at a social and educational settlement, situated in an over-crowded quarter of London, made some apt remarks on the value and use of leisure, says an article in The Christian Science Monitor. The man, or women, he said, who went to his or her daily work with a few verses of beautiful poetry ringing in his brain, with the strains of some beautiful music lingering in his mind, with some noble example he had heard of in his memory, and with the fragrance of some great ideal floating in his consciousness would avoid many of the errors in spending his leisure time which others were only too liable to make. Recent years have seen much progress in the proper use of voluntary agencies.

At one settlement, in the slums area of a great English city several methods have recently been adopted for improving the quality of the human material of the neighborhood through organized leisure and occupations. One of the most affective ways of doing this has been found to be through the art of the drama. Not the old-fashioned "amateur theatricals" in which jealousy and selfishness often ran rife and every man played for his own personal triumph, but the community theatre, in which co-operation and equality of function are the keynotes.

Value of the Drama Shown

At this particular settlement a players' club has been founded; it numbers children and grown people among its members, and has made a special point of working with older and younger together. It has produced a splendid spirit of loyalty and keenness among the members, who give unstintingly of their leisure hours and their enthusiasm. The members give Christmas mystery plays to crowded audiences from its neighborhood, who respond instantly to the dignity and beauty of their representations and fling themselves into the spontaneous spirit of special festivals.

A point that is stressed by this club is the co-operation of the audience. In small halls and where there is real enthusiasm among the players and where imagination is asked for from the audience, the drama becomes a simple human thing with a close touch between audience and performers that can never be reached in big theatres. The audience are no longer merely paying to see a "show," but they are themselves a real part of the play, and neighborhood which harbors such a group of players grows to be proud of their association with them.

Leisure Happily Occupied

Needless to say, a club that believes in co-operation with its audience practices also co-operation among the members who take part. The director avoids the temptation of using only the most gifted. He alternates plays with large and small casts, giving the advanced players the chance to push ahead together, and everyone else their opportunity in a play with much "crowd" action.

The value of the drama lies in the fact that it is, in a sense, not a single art, but a combination of many, and so gives opportunity for the happy employment of leisure. There is the study of great literature, the art of right and beautiful speech, and the study of motion and gesture, of pictorial groupings and rhythm, music and song, the design and making of dresses, scenes and properties, all calling for the use of the special gifts of individuals.

Handicrafts Active

The handicraft side of the settlement's activities was set going as the result of the Handicrafts Exhibition, when between 200 and 300 people of the neighborhood were roused into enthusiasm for this form of occupation. This number consists of mothers, factory workers, children, and other folk representative of the inhabitants of the city. The desire for creative activity has overcome all obstacles; lack of tools and facilities, cramped space, the problem of numbers, and the utter ignorance of every fundamental qualification for craftsmanship have proved no bar.

The comparison between these people and their work and the pupils in the orthodox handicraft classes is an interesting one. Although the teachers and private pupils in the official classes produce more original and striking work, yet they are not naturally so deft in the handling of tools, and require far more encouragement and supervision than the mothers and the more able factory girls, who all their lives have been familiar with the use of various trade tools and implements, and who possess, in addition, a native resourcefulness. The crafts that have been attempted are leather work, light metal work, glove making, stenciling, gesso work, bookbinding and the artistic use of waste material.

In other directions, too, the leisure of the people has been enriched. The use of the gramophone, for example, in the musical evenings, with explanations of the best records, has strengthened the love for music. The settlement is providing, in fact, a constructive and creative alternate to the streets and the drink saloons for the development of personality in leisure time.

South African Minister Asks for Declaration

DEARR, Cape Colony, Aug. 7.—Hon. F. W. Beyers, Minister of Mines, in a long speech here Friday on the constitutional question, said that at present the equal status of the Dominions with other countries existed only in theory. It was desirable, he said, to put the matter in definite form and have a declaration which would make it clear that each of the Dominions forming the British Commonwealth should be on an equal footing with Great Britain and all the rest of the world.

BISHOP OF YUKON TO ATTEND CEREMONY

RT. REV. ISAAC STRINGER TO BE HERE FOR CORNER-STONE LAYING

Head of Enormous Diocese Will Represent Archbishop Matheson on September 9

Among the bishops who are expected to be present at the foundation-stone ceremonies for the New Christ Church Cathedral on September 9, is the Right Rev. Isaac O. Stringer, Bishop of Yukon.

The Bishop of Yukon will take part in the foundation-stone ceremonies on September 9 as the official representative of the Primate, the Most Rev. S. P. Matheson, Archbishop of Rupert's Land.

Bishop Stringer will come to Victoria shortly after a visit to some of the most northerly parts of his huge diocese. The field of work in which the Anglican Church ministers in that diocese covers some 200,000 miles. The inhabitants are found chiefly in towns and villages and near the principal rivers, and it is from a trip up the Porcupine River that the Bishop will come when he arrives at the Pacific Coast.

Thirty-Five Years Old

The diocese of Yukon was formed in 1891, when the Right Rev. W. C. Bompas was appointed the first bishop. The principal inhabitants at that time were natives, with a few traders and an occasional prospector who braved the rigorous uninviting climate to search for the treasures hidden in the earth. In 1896 gold in paying quantities was discovered on the tributaries of the Klondyke River. Within a year the country underwent a transformation, and the natives witnessed with wonder the advent of the fortune hunter from the end of the earth. The population has varied much during the past few years. At present there are about 3,000 white people and 500 natives.

The white congregations are at Dawson, Whitehorse, Mayo, and the Klondyke creeks, with many individuals scattered throughout the Diocese.

Eskimo Work

The Eskimo work is carried on chiefly from two centres on the Arctic Coast, at Herschel Island and Shingle Point, under the Rev. W. A. Geddes, B.A., and the Rev. A. C. McCulium. A church and mission house have been built at Shingle Point from logs that came down the Mackenzie River and were cast up on the shore. These are said to be the finest log buildings in the North.

The Hudson's Bay Company sends a supply ship once a year into the Arctic, leaving Vancouver in the Spring.

A steady, consistent work is carried on among the Indian tribes by the clergy, both white and Indian, and by women workers and native lay readers. More men are urgently required in order to reach the unevangelized tribes of natives, and to minister to the miners and white settlers scattered throughout the country.

ANGLICAN LAYMAN IS CONDUCTING MEETINGS

Exponent of Spiritual Healing Is to Begin Week's Series of Addresses Today

In view of the visit of Mr. James Moore Hickson, a layman of the Anglican Church, to Victoria this week, when he will conduct a brief spiritual healing mission in the Cathedral, the time may not be inopportune to summarize the matured judgment of those ecclesiastical and other authorities who expressed opinions after more than two years' observation of Mr. Hickson's missions conducted around the world.

Four notable results are set out as having been experienced. They are:

(1). newer and truer conception of the will of God in Christ for men. Particularly is this seen in relation to disease and bodily and mental maladies.

(2). a new conception has been gained of the place of the laity in the life of the Church. "The faithful laity," says the pastoral letter of the twenty Australian bishops in speaking of the healing mission, "rose to the height of their priesthood of intercession and service."

(3). the work of intercession should be a constant element in the parochial life. "Where the sick are remembered constantly by name at the ordinary services of the church," says the bishops' pastoral, "where special services for intercession for the sick are held regularly; where the news of the sickness in a home awakens at once not only the sympathy but the prayers of all Christianly-minded neighbors, there the sick find comfort in this proof of the Communion of Saints, and there the Lord Himself can 'work with us and confirm the word of healing with signs following.'"

(4). If the laity have their all-important share in the revival of spiritual healing, not less in it true of the ministry of the Church. It is the priesthood which should be the normal channel of the sacramental exercise of spiritual healing. This is not to exclude the services of laymen or women who have proved themselves to possess the "charisma" of healing and to have consecrated it to the service of God. It does mean that that gift resides in the Church as a whole and should be normally in the Church's ministerial channels. We are inclined to deprecate the holding of public healing services, with their element of publicity and the risk of lack of spiritual preparation on the part of the sick. The demand on the part of the latter for the ministry of healing provides the opportunity for spiritual teaching and guidance along lines of penitence and faith of a very thorough kind. Then in the home and the church the sick so prepared should receive individually the laying on of hands, or where so desired, the anointing with oil in the Name of the Lord, as the pledge of Divine healing for the body and soul.

Mr. Hickson's first service in this city will be on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, in Christ Church Cathedral. On Thursday and Friday mornings next at 10:30, also in the Cathedral, healing services will be held, following an address by Mr. Hickson. Any desiring to be present in any capacity must first obtain cards of admission, which can be obtained only at the schoolroom, 914 Quadra Street, on Monday and Tuesday between the hours of 10 and 12 in the morning and 2 and 4 in the afternoon. The sick desiring to be ministered to by Mr. Hickson at the healing service will also require to obtain cards for the purpose, obtainable at the same place and times. Clergy will be in attendance for consultation. It is noted that members of all religious denominations are equally eligible for healing ministration and the laying on of hands. In further preparation for the mission, services are to be conducted by the Rev. T. E. Rowe on Monday and Tuesday evenings of this week at 8 o'clock. Monday's meeting will be in the schoolroom, Quadra Street, while the Tuesday night meeting is to be held in the Cathedral. A very cordial invitation is extended to all interested to be present. No tickets are required for the Monday and Tuesday meetings.

EMPIRE SETTLEMENT DISCUSSED BY CHURCH

At the concluding sitting of the Summer session of the Church Assembly, at the Church House, the Bishop of Salisbury presented the fourth report of the Missionary Council, and moved that it be received.

They were witnessing, he said, a growing combination of the scattered missionary forces of the church. The hope of the societies working as a team was being realized very fast, and this was resulting in increased mutual confidence and goodwill and in increased power. With regard to results from the World Call to the Church, the Bishop counselled patience. They could not and ought not to expect anything very definite in the way of men and money at such an early stage in the history of the movement. There had been fifty-seven definite offers in fourteen dioceses. There was great encouragement in regard to the offerings in money, but the most hopeful and significant thing of all was the volunteering of young men at Oxford and Cambridge to co-operate in the movement. The demand coming to the church was the demand for youth. Altogether the outlook was full of encouragement and hope.

The report was received.

The Bishop of London made a brief statement concerning the work of the Social and Industrial Commission. They had not, he said, received a single penny from the Assembly to carry on the work. The Church of England Council of Empire Settlement had made an extraordinarily promising start in all matters except that of finance. They had arranged for a great appeal on Empire Day, but that effort was ruined by the general strike. The Government had promised to give £1 for every £1 raised. They hoped to get £10,000 by this effort; instead they got only £50.

Special Prayers for New Cathedral Building

Use will be made of the daily services in Christ Church Cathedral during August as occasions for special prayers on behalf of the building of the new cathedral, according to an announcement yesterday by the Dean, the Very Rev. C. S. Quainton.

Short intercession services will be held on Wednesdays and Fridays at 5:15 p.m., and special prayers will also be said at the morning service at 9:30.

On New Year's Day, the Bishop of the diocese issued a message to "the members and friends of the Church of England in the Diocese of Columbia," asking that the need of a new cathedral and the provision of funds for its erection, be made a matter of prayer during the year. Shortly after the Diocesan Synod meetings in February, prayer cards were circulated through the churches of the diocese, and remembrances of the new cathedral has been made regularly in a number of churches at the Sunday services.

WESTERN CHURCH IS LOOKING TO THE EAST

Dr. W. W. Peet Sailed Recently for Athens as "Ambassador of Goodwill" From Church of Christ

Throughout history the Christian churches in the East have sent many ambassadors to the West. But not until the present day have the most Western churches sent a fully accredited representative to those of the East.

This representative is Dr. W. W. Peet, who sailed recently for Athens as an Ambassador of Goodwill under appointment by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America for the purpose of promoting mutual understanding between American and Eastern churches. This is to be the first step toward a possible formation of a World Council of Christian Churches.

Dr. Peet, who undertakes this unique ambassadorship, has been one of the outstanding figures in the Near East during the last forty-five years. From the time in 1881 when he gave up an important post with the Santa Fe Railroad to become treasurer and business manager of the American missions in Turkey, his work continually increased until 1919 the Council of the League of Nations requested him to become their High Commissioner in Constantinople, to be accredited to the Sublime Porte and the various patriarchates. Foreseeing the failure of the allied policies in Turkey, he refused this position, which he felt would limit his work for the cause of humanity in that part of the world.

Legendary Figure

In the Turkey of Abdul Hamid, Dr. Peet was almost a legendary figure. He had the confidence of all the foreign Ambassadors, of the leaders of the minority peoples, and many of the most influential Turks. Therefore, whenever he desired any special concession from the Government he was able to bring to bear upon it pressure that was almost irresistible. On one occasion the famous Red Sultan is reputed to have asked of his Grand Vizier:

"Who is this Bible House man? He is able to get into every court in Europe. That's more than I can do."

Stamboul Headquarters

The Bible House in Stamboul was the headquarters of Dr. Peet, and throughout the Ottoman Empire the "Bible House Man" became synonymous with "great humanitarian," for it was Dr. Peet who organized and administered most of the relief funds coming from the United States, from England and elsewhere in times of famine, epidemics, war and massacre. Millions of dollars have passed through his hands for the alleviation of distress. The present Near East Relief Movement is a development and augmentation of the organization inaugurated by Dr. Peet on the occasion of the great massacre of 1895, and revived by him and his colleagues to meet every subsequent crisis.

Dr. Peet also acted as diplomatic representative of the American missionaries in Turkey and Bulgaria. In this capacity he conducted his tasks with such skill that the State Department more than once instructed its Ambassadors, before making important decisions, to consult Dr. Peet.

Many Difficult Tasks

During his more than two-score years of service Dr. Peet has had many difficult tasks to handle in connection with questionable or high-handed acts of local officials or designing persons. Among these were the expulsion under false charges of George Knapp from Bitlis in 1896; the imprisonment of several Americans in different places, and especially the kidnapping of Miss Ellen Stone on the Bulgarian frontier in 1902. On this latter occasion Dr. Peet was intrusted with the transfer of the ransom money from Constantinople to the hands of the brigands, thereby making possible the surrender of Miss Stone and her companion. For this exploit he received the personal thanks of President Roosevelt.

The headquarters of Dr. Peet in his new work will be Athens, but he will visit the three patriarchs of the Greek Orthodox Church at Constantinople, Jerusalem and Alexandria, and the various ecclesiastics at the head of the national divisions of this church in Athens, Sofia, Belgrade, Bucharest and Moscow. He will also visit the three patriarchs of the Gregorian or Armenian National Church at Constantinople, Echmiadzin and Sis; and the patriarchs of the Syrian, Assyrian, Nestorian and Coptic Churches in Mesopotamia and Egypt.

Fairfield Church Pastor To Reoccupy Pulpit Here

The Rev. R. W. Lee, minister of the Fairfield United Church, will resume his ministry today after four weeks' vacation, and preach morning and evening.

At the morning service Mr. Lee will take as his subject "Journeying With God." Mr. W. R. Jacques will be the soloist. In the evening at 7:30, the subject of address will be, "Is It Worth While Being a Christian?" A feature of this service will be the solos by Miss Isabel Dicken, of Fernie, B.C. The minister and officials extend a real hearty invitation to the public to attend these services.

Band Sunday Today

Today will be "Band Sunday" at the Salvation Army Citadel, Broad Street, the Citadel Band being responsible for the morning and evening meetings and the Young People's Band for the afternoon service. Bandmaster Bent will conduct a programme of Army music at the Jubilee Hospital, commencing at 2:30.

At the 11 a.m. Holiness Meeting, Ensign Sharp will conduct a dedication service for the infant daughter of Bandsman and Mrs. Thornett, of Rock Point. Last Sunday Mrs. Houghton, who with her husband, Captain Walter Houghton, is in charge of the native work in Glen Vowell, B. C., was one of the speakers at the evening meeting. Other visiting officers will be in Victoria during August, and Commandant and Mrs. Jones expect to take charge of the meetings again tomorrow, after an enjoyable furlough.

ENGLAND ON EVE OF SPIRITUAL REVIVAL

Movement Among Young University Men Indicates Approaching Revival, Bishop Thinks

England is on the eve of a great spiritual revival, said the Bishop of Salisbury at a meeting of the Church Assembly recently.

As a result of a remarkable movement among young men at Oxford, Cambridge and other Universities, a campaign was being conducted by 133 students in four dioceses, while in September a further 186 students were going to conduct another campaign.

"It is certain," said the Bishop, "there are already signs that the living power of God is working among us. I see it in the progress of the revision of the Prayer Book. I could see it in the wonderful spirit that passed all over the country when the general strike was called off, and in all ways the spirit of God is present, and we have a revival coming.

"We have now got a movement of concerted prayer. We started with a fellowship of sixty, and now we have a sense of fellowship with some 60,000 in that movement."

MODERN QUESTIONS DISCUSSED BY DEAN

The Dean of Columbia is using the Sunday evenings of the Summer months in Christ Church Cathedral as opportunities when modern questions in the Christian faith may be fairly faced, and guidance offered to the honest seeker after truth. The Sunday evening services have been attended by very large congregations, suggesting that the course is meeting with a real need.

This evening, at the 7:30 service, the dean will preach on the subject of "The Virgin Birth of Christ."

Not long ago, it is reported, a working man in the Old Country, on being asked whether he went to church, said, vigorously but crudely, "No. I never go to church. I can't believe the story of the Virgin Birth, and the church says I'll be damned if I don't." What has official Christianity got to say to such a man? There are others, honest men who, while not denying the story outright, are hesitating and uncomfortable about it. Are such men to receive no consideration?

The dean will face these questions as fairly as he can, and try to help the honest man who wants guidance.

Power of Mind Over Body Is Theme at Metropolitan

The power of mind over body will be discussed this evening by Dr. J. C. Elliott, of Los Angeles, who is drawing large audiences in Metropolitan Church both afternoon and evening during the week, to his course of lectures on "Religion and Health." Dr. Elliott will show how the mind can cause and cure disease, and how our mental attitude affects our physical condition. He will show the difference between mental healing and Divine healing, in both of which Dr. Elliott has faith. All persons interested in better health will want to hear Dr. Elliott this evening.

Doors will be open at seven o'clock, and persons are advised to come early. At the morning service at eleven o'clock the Rev. Dr. Sipprell will continue his series of Summer sermons and will speak on 'My Shepherd or the God I Know," setting forth the intimacy we may enjoy in fellowship with the Divine and the resources that are for us in the storehouse of God.

Mr. W. J. Hendra, a noted soloist of Edmonton, will be the special soloist at the evening service and will sing "In the Wilderness I Strayed."

The Summer congregations at the Metropolitan are excellent and persons visiting from Canada, England and the United States are present every Sunday.

New Thought Lectures

Rev. J. H. Pateman, ex-pastor of the largest New Thought Temple in the world at Cincinnati, Ohio, will begin a series of lectures at the New Thought Temple today. At 11 a.m. he will speak on "Escaping Undesirable Conditions," and at 7:30 he will speak on "The New Healing." He will also lecture at 3 and 8 p.m. daily throughout the week. Mr. Pateman is better known as the "Healing Pastor."

Christendom the World Over

A Weekly Review of Religious News

The centre of religious interest this week is across the Atlantic. Organized Christianity in Britain has taken a forward step in its efforts to bring about industrial peace by submitting a definite proposition to the Government, to which the miners' executive had given their approval. The proposals were presented by a representative body of Anglicans and Free Churchmen to Premier Baldwin, but met with a rebuff. Acording to The Christian World the tone of his speech, in which he discussed the matter previous to the interview, was studiously contemptuous of the whole clerical investigation. The churches, however, nothing daunted, have appealed to public opinion and a late cable dispatch says that the national conferance of miners' delegates has accepted the churchmen's plan of mediation and are referring it to their districts to be voted upon. The drafting of a concrete plan to meet a specific situation registers the farthest step in the efforts of British Christianity towards industrial conciliation. The general strike, it was conceded, came to an early end to a considerable extent through the persistent and tactful mediation of religious leaders, led at that time by the Archbishop of Canterbury. There seems to be a quickened determination among the church people in Britain to bring about peace in the industrial as well as the international realm, more especially since the Conference on Politics, Economics and Citizenship held in Birmingham in March of last year. The "Copec" idea, as it is called, is evidently growing.

A United Methodism

After ten years' discussion and the bitterest opposition by a small minority of ministers and laymen, the Wesleyan Conference, by a vote of 414 to 125, carried the resolution in favor of the union of the Primitive Methodists, United Methodists and Wesleyan Methodists, and the Enabling Bill will be sent down to the synods of 1927 for approval. The Wesleyans have shown the greatest hesitation during the negotiations, principally on the questions of ordination and the Sacraments, towards which they have something of the High Church attitude. Great patience and good temper has been evident during the decade of discussion and the earnest desire for union and the necessity of unified action overcame all obstacles. A motion by the Rev. J. E. Rattenbury, one of the Wesleyan leaders, to postpone union until 1939, when it would synchronize with the bi-centenary of Methodism, was lost and the union will take full effect by 1928.

Cardinal Mercier's Letters

Lord Halifax, the lay leader of the Anglo-Catholic party in the Church of England, has published with the Archbishop of Canterbury's consent, two letters written to him by the late Cardinal Mercier, one of them dated but a few days before his death. The Archbishop of Canterbury had suggested the publication of the results up to the present of the Malines Conversations which had been carried on for four years between representatives of the Roman and Anglican Churches at the Cardinal Palace in Belgium. The Roman prelate, while avowing his passionate desire for union of the churches, states that "as our exchange of views are pursued within our meetings, the line of demarcation between the articles on which agreement existed or has been achieved, and the articles about which divergences exist, become more and more distinct, the difficulties in the way of final success loom larger on the horizon, and the reasons for hoping seem less convincing." Though deprived of leadership by the death of the Belgian Cardinal and Abbe Portal, the French ecclesiastic, the Conversations, it is announced, will be continued.

The Saint Francis Sept-Centenary

It is seven centuries since Francis d'Assisi brought his message of the love of God and utter consecration to God and man to a wearied Europe and a worldly church. The rebirth of religion in the thirteenth century, due to the preaching of Saint Francis, is one of the bright pages in medieval church history. Italy and the Roman Catholic Church have planned a series of celebrations for the second half of this year of his death, the first of which was the celebration on July 31 of Pontifical High Mass in the Cathedral in Rufino, in which Saint Francis was baptized, and in which he frequently preached. At the great ceremony, on October 4, it is announced that Cardinal Merry de Val will be the Papal Legate. This announcement discredits the rumor that that occasion might be marked by the appearance of the Pope himself in person, whose departure from the bounds of the Vaticanf would have indicated in this dramatic way the settlement of the conflict between the Papal See and the Italian Government.

Daily Vacation Bible School

The Daily Vacation Bible School, which has been carried on by two or three congregations in British Columbia, represents a widespread attempt to furnish religious education during the holiday period. Organized in New York in 1901 by the Rev. Dr. Boville, who brought together "idle students, idle churches and idle children," the movement is now world-wide, 2,500 having been established in fourteen provinces in China under the care of 7,500 native students who give their voluntary services in patriotic love for China. In Calcutta 200 students had volunteered. Dr. Boville, speaking recently in Toronto, urged the needs of the 40,000,000 illiterate children of India and China's 60,000,000. The programme of the Vacation School is aimed to induce the spirit of worship, knowledge of Christian truth and unselfish service. Song, dramatics and play are prominent and every service includes the salutation of the national and Christian flags. The churches, Dr. Boville contended, being exempt from taxation, should discharge their debt to the community by keeping their doors open all Summer.

Clipped From Church Columns

Dr. Eeler, a young Viennese scholar, who has given prolonged attention to the Slavonic version of the Jewish historian, Josephus, which was reported in this column recently, is said to be preparing a picture of the physical appearance and personality of Jesus based on the svidence in this text.

West Africa has now the unique record of having a "reverend" as a ruler. Succeeding his father as the "Amanyanabo of Brass," in Nigeria, the Rev. Anthony O. Ockiya becomes the ruler of his people. The new king had been a missionary for many years.

In Japan there are 48,000,000 Buddhists, 17,000,000 Shintoists, and only 210,000 Christians. But in 177 colleges, of the 222 organizations, 101 were Buddhist and 114 were Christian. Though the nominal Buddhist students considerably outnumber the Christian, a questionnaire showed that the religious inclinations of all students were about equally divided.

Scottish "Archbishop's" Death Loss to Nation

The religious life of Scotland has been impoverished by the death which took place the other day at Edinburgh, of the Rev. Dr. Sir Andrew Wallace Williamson. He was spoken of as "the Archbishop of the Church of Scotland" when he resigned, in June last year, the charge of St. Giles, Edinburgh.

Born at Thornhill, Dumfrieshire, in December, 1856, Dr. Williamson was educated first at the parish school and at Edinburgh University. In 1882 he was elected to the parish of North Leith, and from 1885 to 1909 was minister of St. Cuthbert's Church. In 1910, when the premier charge of the Church of Scotland, that of St. Giles' Cathedral, became vacant, through the resignation of Dr. Cameron, he was chosen as his successor. Sir A. Williamson was one of the King's chaplains for Scotland, as he also was in the reign of King Edward, and continuously, from 1885 until the time of her death, he preached annually before Queen Victoria.

In 1913 he was elevated to the highest position in the Church of Scotland—that of moderator of the General Assembly. In 1923 the Freedom of Edinburgh was conferred on him. He received his knighthood in February last.

Sermon on "Nature Study"

In response to numbers of requests to continue the series of sermons on nature study at St. John's Church, the rector, the Rev. F. A. P. Chadwick, has chosen the subject of "The Instincts and Habits of the Fish of the Sea" for this evening. This subject should prove very interesting, and there is a wealth of reference in the Bible as to the fish of river and sea, the Apostolic band being composed chiefly of fishermen on the Sea of Galilee.

At the morning service the rector will deal with the theme "The Virgin Birth of Christ," that being the subject of the Scripture lesson for the day.

There will be Holy Communion at 8 a.m., the other services being: morning prayer at 11 o'clock, and Evensong at 7:30 o'clock.

"Religion and Health" Topic at Oak Bay Church

Dr. J. C. Elliott, who has been speaking to large audiences this week on the general subject of "Religion and Health," has kindly consented to conduct the service in the Oak Bay United Church this morning. His subject will be "The Relation of Religion and Health," and everybody should take this opportunity of hearing him. The service in the evening will be taken by the Rev. Robert Aylward, B.A., who will speak on "The Tragedy of an Oath."

Moonlight Excursion

The Ladies' Aid of the City Temple is arranging for a moonlight excursion to Roche Harbor on Saturday, August 21, via the steamer Olympic. An orchestra will be provided, and community singing on board, also refreshments served en route. It is expected that permission will be given to visit the beautiful gardens of the Roche Harbor Lime & Cement Co., which are electrically lighted and provided with large camp fire. Those expecting to take the trip are asked to book their tickets now at the office of the Puget Sound Navigation Co., on Government St.; Fletcher Bros. music store, Melross & Co., Fort St.; or at the office of the secretary, 308 Pemberton Building.

Summer Programme

Centennial Church continues its special Summer programme today. In the morning the pastor will speak on the subject, "What is Salvation?" Mr. J. Almond will be the soloist. In the evening the subject will be "The Glory of Man." The Harmonic Quartette will render several selections. In these addresses Mr. Westman will endeavor to lead his congregation out into a larger conception of God and man. Religion must mean more than the narrowing of the soul to a few dogmas or creeds, but must make man master of all harmonies and symphonies. The more man knows of God's works the more he comes to appreciate Him.

Indian Missionary Will Address Audience Here

Word of great interest to the Baptists of Victoria has been received by the Rev. Jas. Strachan of the First Baptist Church, from Dr. Willard Litch, stating that Dr. Jessie Allyn, one of the greatest Baptist missionaries in their fields in India, and who for the past year has been on furlough in Canada, will arrive in the city on Wednesday, and will attend the Women's Missionary Meeting which will be held on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the First Baptist Church Ladies' Parlor.

In the evening Dr. Allyn will address a mass meeting of the Baptists of Victoria in the auditorium of the First Baptist Church, Quadra Street. The choir will be in attendance, and will sing the anthem, "Unto Thee Will I Sing." Mrs. MacIntosh will also contribute a solo.

Dr. Jessie Allyn has had charge of the medical work and medical evangelism in the Pithapuram field of India. She is an outstanding speaker and has a wonderful story to tell of her work and experiences in India.

Prayer Circle Forming

A prayer circle and Bible class is being formed in this city, and will hold its first meeting under the leadership of Mr. E. E. Richards, in the King's Hall, 571 Yates Street, today, at 2:30 p.m.

This will be a branch of a movement started by the Rev. Commander Roberts, R.N., in England, and wide in its ramifications. The officers urge that, "All those who wish to aid in bringing this nation into a right relationship with Almighty God, that salvation, peace, prosperity and health may be its portion, and that these blessings may flow out to the others nations of the world," join the movement.

When long hair doesn't make a man look intellectual is when his wife picks it of his coat.

Cinderella of Empire Finds Fairy Godfather

Little Colony of British Honduras, Whose Governor Has Just Visited Here, Finds Itself Heir to Fortune of Wealthy British Patriot

Only people who have been in similar position can appreciate to the full the sensations of the Governor of the little British Colony which recently came into an unexpected inheritance when Baron Bliss, one of England's wealthy patriots, decided to leave to it his great fortune for the much-needed further development of its resources.

The Colony was British Honduras, whose Governor, Major J. A. Burdon, C.M.G., previously administrator of St. Kitts-Nevis in the Leeward Islands, has just recently been in Victoria in the course of a cross-Canada tour. Major Burdon is already on his way back to Central America, but Mrs. Burdon, who accompanied her husband, is still visiting relatives here, and her entertaining and informative conversations about this little Colony of which her husband is Governor have attracted a great deal of interested attention to a part of the Empire which is all too little known.

New Governor Explorer

Although he has been Governor of British Honduras for little more than a year, Major Burdon has explored nearly the whole of the country, a stated which gains significance when it is explained that British Honduras is without railways or roadways, the sole highways being the rivers which flow from the interior to the sea. This exploration convinced him of the tremendous potentialities of the country, and there awoke in him a keen ambition to develop its resources still further and put the Colony "on the mao." "On the map" it certainly already is in specific respects, but Governor Burdan saw many other respects in which the commercial value, both of its natural products and its potential products could be enormously increased by the mere building of a railway and the establishment of factories for the local treatment of some of the output of the country.

British Honduras has been called the "Cinderella of the Empire." A limited budget handicapped any measures for improvements. Just as this disheartening discovery impressed itself on the new Governor, there arrived the "fairy godfather" in the person of Baron Bliss. This wealthy English gentleman, an invalid of many years standing, traveling about the tropics in his yacht, one day arrived in the bay outside Belize, the capital of British Honduras. He invited the Governor out to see him, and informed him that he wished to leave his fortune to the Colony.

The news was almost too good to be true, hut when the full portent of the announcement was grasped, the work of drawing up the necessary papers was promptly proceeded with, and within four days these were signed and sealed. Baron Bliss, even at than time a very ill man, died a few days later, leaving the whole of his fortune, barring an annuity to his wife, to British Honduras. The annual interest from this amounts to about £25,000. The Governor of the Colony, the Attorney-General and the Colonial Secretary being the trustees.

Self-Appointed Mission

Major Burdon's mission to this country was entirely voluntary. He came to Canada primarily with the idea of trying to interest Canadian capital in the development of British Honduras, particularly advertising the country's need of a railway and hotel, of which it has neither.

He has also emphasized the possibilities of the place for the growing of citrous fruits. Already shipments of grapefruit to England and elsewhere have called attention to the delicious quality of this little-developed product. Some of the fruit which he brought all the way from Central America to Victoria, a journey which lasted about four weeks, was declared by those who sampled it to be of very superior quality.

"And even Covent Garden," Mrs. Burdon states, "is now asking us for bigger consignments of this fruit than British Honduras can supply, so much do they like our product."

Exciting Journey

Mrs. Burdon has herself traveled about the Colony a great deal with her husband, and is, consequently, very well able to speak about the character of the country and people. Both, as she notes, have received a good deal of publicity in the past few months at the hands of Mr. F. A. Mitchell-Hedges, who, with Mr. T. A. Joyce, of the Ethnological Department of the British Museum, and Lady (Richmond) Brown, has been excavating the ruined Maya city of Lubsantun, and is sending special despatches to The Daily Mail, London, on the subject. One of the trips on which Mrs. Burdon accompanied her husband was to this romantic ruin, some photographs of which she has brought with her to Victoria. This particular expedition began on April 8 last, when they left their capital, Belize, in a launch, accompanied by the Governor's private secretary and a "boy," taking provisions and carrying kit for a week. That night they slept on board the launch, arriving at the mouth of the Rio Grande River (one of the numerous great rivers of British Honduras) at sunrise. At nine o'clock the same morning they transferred to two doreys (dugouts), operated by Maya Indian crews. They and their bags were put in one of the doreys and the rest of the loads and the private secretary and the "boy" in the other. They were given chairs, and established themselves for the day under sun umbrellas while the crews paddled. The Rio Grande is a fine broad river for many miles up, and the scenery along its shores has tropical variety and beauty. For three and a half days they traveled in this fashion, the river gradually narrowing and shallowing in the higher reaches, so that the crews many times had to get out and wade, pushing the craft along and warping them over the rapids, while at other times the chairs had to be put in the bottom of the boat while the Governor and Mrs. Burdon lay down to pass under some overhanging log which had fallen across the river.

Pioneer Experiences

There were pioneer experiences which sound like the stories of some traveling magistrate through the African jungle. The accommodation which they were able to get at any of the plantations was of the simplest, although they had the most hospitable kind of reception wherever they went. At one place they were invited to ride in the tractor engine of one of the great caterpillar tractors which is used in getting the mahogany out of the forests down to the rivers.

"Some parts of the road were like going up the side of a house, and wherever it was uneven the jerking and rattling nearly sent me flying off the cab in which we were seated," Mrs. Burdon recalls with amusement.

The same day they went to the Lubaantun settlement to see the famous ruins which Mr. Joyce is studying for the British Museum. Mr. Joyce, Mr. Mitchell-Hedges and Lady Richmond Brown and her secretary met them and took them over the ruins.

"When they ponted out in detail the various matters of interest, showing evidences of the enormous Maya city they have partly unearthed, one could not help realizing what a tremendous find it is. The ruins have been known to exist for years, and Mr. Mitchell-Hedges did not for a moment pretend that he had discovered them. But to him must be given the credit of the great work done in clearing them, and the fact that by talk and advertisement he has at last got the British Museum to take an active interest in them," says Mrs. Burdon.

"The country is infested with snakes and scorpions, and for protection's sake we all wore breeches and thick boots and puttees, so that the exploration proved a very warm ordeal," recalled Mrs. Burdon.

Hold Open-Air Court

During the same journey, not many miles from Lubaantun, they had the experience of holding a native reception in the open. Arriving at this little settlement, Columbia, they found themselves billetted in a palm-thatched barn with a mud floor. The quarters were small, and one room had to serve both as dining and bedroom. The Governor and Mrs. Burdon sat outside while the Governor interviewed the headmen of the villages who came to pay their respects and make complaints, etc., their "boy" interpreting, as the Maya Indians here spoke in Spanish and could not understand English.

After this they made the return journey back to the coast, the trip down river being a comparatively quick thing, assisted by the currents, and shooting the rapids.

Other trips with her husband have also been taken by Mrs. Burdon, and in this way she has seen a great deal of the country, and appreciates the necessity of the railway which her husband is anxious to get for the more specific purpose of opening up the great mahogany forests, miles beyond the river areas, which have been under process of clearing since the earliest history of the Colony.

Need Highways

"If any single factor more than another has retarded the economic development of the Colony it is the lack of good highways throughout the country," she says. Allowing that the Maya Indians had brought into the Colony that high state of civilization so often accredited to them, and that they had built roads to the various settlements which they established, it must be assumed that they had abandoned this part of the country centuries before the discovery of Columbus, and that by the time the first white settlers landed, forest had once more overgrown the clearings they made.

The first and sole occupation of the early white settlers was wood-cutting, and as the country is generously supplied with rivers and the logs could be floated down these to the sea, the colonists hitherto have given little thought to the question of roadways.

The chief industry of the colony for some 200 years has been the export of mahogany and cedar. The quality of the mahogany is the finest known; but in spite of this, the yearly exports, which average some 25,000 tons, are modest and scanty in comparison to the extent of available forest areas, and are capable of considerable expansion. Until fairly recently no regular or systematized exploitation has taken place. Operations have been short-lived, haphazard, with no thought for the future, and very costly; partly owing to lack of proper transport facilities, partly to lack of technical advice. The cost could certainly be reduced if proper investigation were made into the matter.

Source of Chewing Gum

Very few of the millions of people on this continent and elsewhere who chew gum give any thought to the source of its main ingredient. Chicle is the raw material used in the manufacture of chewing gum, and next in importance to its trade in mahogany is British Honduras' trade in this product.

Chicle is yielded by the sapodilla tree, following tapping as it is practices on the maple tree in Eastern Canada. Protection against excessive tapping of the sapodilla tree is one of the things which is now being sought in British Honduras.

The whole question of forest protection and reafforestation has, in fact, come to hold an important place of recent years in the Colony, and just three years ago a Forest Trust was established. The object of this is the protection, maintenance and development of the crown forests, as well as to provide the expert technical advice to private enterprises. The conservatorship is held now by an ex-officer of the Indian Service, with five assistants from the English or Scottish universities. With this properly established department the Colony's principal industry is at last placed on a secure and profitable basis.

Belize, the Capital of British Honduras

Export statistics taken from the Handbook 1924:

The forests undoubtedly are the principal industry of the country, the export of mahogany alone for the year 1923 amounting to $9,967,186, while cedar exports amounted to $663,437. Apart from this, the total value of exports amounted to only $2,196,884, although the statistics of quantities of the principal exports indicate a far larger business than the amount received for them suggests. For instance, the Colony shipped less than 500,000 bunches of bananas (valued at about thirty cents a bunch), 2,206,000 pounds of chicle (chewing gum), over five and a half million cocnuts, as well as sponges, rum, tortoiseshell, copra and other things.

The coconut industry is by far the most important agricultural enterprise of the Colony and is still extending; its success depending on suitability of soil and climate, small demand on labor, and easy transport by water. Most of the merchants own or control coconut plantations, and the coconut trees form an almost continuous fringe along the extensive coast line and bays.

The banana industry of British Honduras is only a minute part of the great industry developed by the United Fruit Company in Central America and Jamaica, the spread of the Panama disease among the bananas has unfortunately done much to damage it.

Belize, the Capital

Mrs. Burdon's description of the capital, Belize, is interesting.

"Belize was apparently chosen by the early settlers at the mouth of the Old River (otherwise known as the Belize River), as being the best centre for the collection and shipping of their logs. But it is merely," she says, "a town built up on a mangrove swamp, with no proper drainage possible. The resultant insect pests and damp vapors during the hot seasons do not make for comfortable living."

The swampy conditions account for the myriads of landcrabs, which come up through the ground, making gardening an impossibility. Mrs. Burdon recalls having shot some two hundred and fifty of these in a single afternoon in her own garden, where they persistently destroy everything as soon as it is planted. The eradication of this pest is one of the things which the present Governor is hoping to find a means of effecting.

Government House, it is interesting to learn, was erected in 1832.

Rainy Season

This valley of the Old River, behind Belize, is one of the richest in the whole colony. It takes its rise in the Blue Mountains in the Republic of Guatemala, the hydrographic basin of its most northerly portion is much lower than the river itself, consequently in the rainy season much of the surrounding country is under water.

Outside Belize the vegetation varies with the temperature, and includes a wide range of tropical and sub-tropical plants. Bananas, oranges, limes, lemons, mangoes, custard-apples, and pineapples are among the fruits grown. The native flora are also numerous, and of very beautiful coloring and fragrance. Orchids are particularly abundant and beautiful.

Anyone who has read any of Mr. Mitchell Hedge's accounts of the sea-life off British Honduras must have had his interest aroused in the strange fish and other aquatic animals which he describes. Mrs. Burdon is herself a very keen fisherman, and says that to lovers of this sport the waters along the coast and up the rivers provc an endless attraction. Tarpon, June fish, and innumerable other species abound in these waters. In two afternoon expeditions off one of the small cayes (sandy islands off the coast) she caught, with trolling rod and drop line, as many as thirty-three edible fish of varying sizes and of eighteen different varieties.

Body of Germ-Laden Fly Reeks With Disease

The fly is more than a pest. He is a menace to health. His germ-laden body reeks with filth and disease.

People are the unwilling hosts of the house flies. Time was, not so many years ago, when the appearance of these cheerful insects was welcome as one of the harbingers of Spring. When they became more abundant they were regarded at worst, as a nuisance. Now every up-to-date housewife thinks of them with dread. In less than two decades there has come the clear-cut evidence that this obiquitous insect is more than a mere annoyance or plague—that it is a conveyor and disseminator of disease and as such a direct menace to public health. The common house fly is responsible for more deaths every year, on the North American continent, than all the poisonous reptiles and savage beasts of, India or Africa kill in those far-off jungles.

That "Kruschen" Feeling!

Show us the man or woman that's never fallen victim to the glamour of the circus, and we'll show you somebody that's never been young.

Now the circus is the pulpit of the gospel of physical fitness. You know that feeling of unreasonable envy that grows on you as you watch the performers' breathless feats? Isn't the explanation of it the dreary fact that you're not so fit yourself as you'd like to be — that a sedentary life has lowered your vitality and sapped your energy?

Isn't it time to put an end to this sorry state of affairs? Isn't it high time you enlisted the help of the "little daily dose" of Kruschen Salts?

As much as will lie on a 10-cent piece every morning, tasteless in your first cup of coffee or tea, provides your eliminating organs with the reminder and the daily aid that nature prescribes; but, in the stuffy indoor inactive life you're forced to lead, fails to supply from your food in the natural way.

Each little pinch is a blend in nature's own proportions of nature's six essential mineral salts. Every scrap of the poisonous waste-matter that results in constipation, and all the attendant evils of constipation, is gently but surely driven out of your inside. Clear, refreshed blood is sent coursing gloriously through your every vein, to set you tingling from top to toe with "that Kruschen feeling!"

Buy a bottle of Kruschen Salts now — and start the "little daily dimeful" at once. You'll grow steadily fitter every day, and your spirits will reflect the change. It's the little daily dimeful that does it!

About Those Who Are Making Canadian Literature

More notice has been taken of Canadian literature as Canadian literature in the last two or three years than in any time previous. This is largely due to the Canadian Authors' Association, which is endeavoring to awaken Canadians to the fact that we can, if we have ambition enough and sufficient tenacity of purpose, produce something along this line in the Dominion which will rank second to none. There is everything in Canada to inspire writers, whether their medium of expression be poetry or prose. In fact, we have in this three million eight hundred thousand square miles which constitutes our part of the Commonwealth of Nations, a field than can furnish as diversified and magnificent material as any country in the world, whether we draw upon our rich and picturesque past or our vital, splendid present.

It was only after Confederation that a distinct national ideal took form in the hearts of the Canadian people, and with that national ideal came the germ of our literature. It has not been of such slow growth when one realizes that not quite sixty years have elapsed since then. Naturally for several decades we had nothing indiginous. Whatever of a literary nature we produced was not originally Canadian. It takes more than one generation for a more or less transplanted people to get away from inherent traditions and become part and parcel of their adopted country, in thought as well as in deed.

In 1868 Charles Mair, a native-born Canadian, came to the front as a poet. It is noteworthy that he is still with us, although he may be called the earliest of our Canadian writers, if we date the beginning of our literature from Confederation. Previous to that there was what might be styled the "Loyalist or Emigre literature." But that is a fascinating and separate subject. Following the Loyalist literature, as Mr. J. D. Logan points out in his delightful volume on the subject, there came what he terms the "nativistic" literature for which the native-born men and women before Confederation were responsible, and which numbered in its ranks the famous Joseph Howe, born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, who, along with Haliburton, inaugurated the epoch of Canadian creative journalism and Canadian political literature, and as Mr. Logan says of Thomas Chandler Haliburton, "He was the first systematic humorist and satirist of the Anglo-Saxon peoples."

In Charles Mair we find the forerunner of all of the Canadian nature poets: Charles G. D. Roberts, William Bliss Carman, Archibald Lampman, William Wilfred Campbell, E. Pauline Johnson, Duncan Campbell Scott, and many others. If we include among these writers, Frederick George Scott, Margaret Marshall Saunders, Sir Gilbert Parker, we have noted ten noted authors, all of whom were born in the sixties and who inaugurated a period of national literary creation. Most of these writers are living today, and are still producing. Five of them are active members of the Canadian Authors' Association. Jean Blewett, another charming writer who was born in 1869, is what may be termed a genre poet. She and Francis Sherman, whose poetry shows a distinct lean toward mysticism, belong in the class of this period.

A later decade brought forth the poetry of a dozen or more well-known Canadians, among them Elizabeth Roberts Macdonald, sister of C. G. D. Roberts; Isabel Ecclestone Mackay, Arthur Stringer, Peter McArthur and Robert Service.

William Henry Drummond, one of the best loved of all Canadian poets, belongs in a class by himself. He was born in Ireland, but he became the warmly sympathetic interpreter of the French-Canadian peasant, singing of the picturesque voyageur, the habitant, the lumber jack. It is through his efforts that the simple French-Canadians, up to his time so little appreciated by the English-speaking race of Canada, became known to us as they really are, possessed of noble ideals, and of a character as loyal as it is honest and lovable.

Still later and up to the present we have the younger poets beginning with the late Marjory Pickthall, whose first volume of verse, "Drift of Pinions," was published in 1913. Miss Pickthall was one of the prime movers in the founding of the Victoria and Islands branch of the Canadian Authors' Association, and during the two years which she lived in Victoria did much of her best work. Traveling up and down the east and west coasts of the Island she had gathered together a large quantity of material which she had intended to embody in one or more romances. Nothing in the world appealed to her more than the primitive splendor and loveliness of this part of Canada. But this work was cut short. She died long before she had reached the zenith of her fame, or the fullness of her creative art.

Robert Norwod and Katherine Hale, the latter a true patriot poet, have given some rich things to our literature. And there is the younger Roberts, son of C. G. D. Roberts, and a score or more of others.

In the realm of fiction there are a legion of outstanding names. Among those with which most of us are familiar are L. M. Montgomery, author of "Ann of Green Gables," and Nellie McClung, whose first book, "Rowing Reeds in Danny," met with instant recognition. Norman Duncan has written some gripping tales of the rugged coasts of Newfoundland, and Frederick William Wallace writes of Nova Scotia and its deep sea fishermen. Louis Hemon, whose charming little book, "Maria Chapdelaine," was another contribution to French-Canadian literature, was not born here, but was a native of France. John Murray Gibbons, who was the first president of the C.A.A., has written three good novels, in one of which, "The Conquering Hero," he takes as his scene the Rocky Mountains and British Columbia. Still another member of the Roberts clan, Theodore Goodrich, a younger brother of Charles, has written some stirring yarns of romantic adventures in the early days of Newfoundland and New Brunswick.

In historical fiction we have C. H. J. Snider's stories of the naval engagements of the Great Lakes, and a splendid pen picture of the rebel leader, Mackenzie. Another historical romance, "In Candlelight Days," is delightfully told by Adelin M. Tesky. To this class also belongs Archie McKishnie, Anison North, Percival Cooney and others.

L. Adams Beck has richly contributed to the historical field in "The Ladies," "The Chaste Diana," "The Divine Lady" and "Glorious Apollo." But her romances are not concerned with people or things Canadian, though it is to the honor of our literature that she invariably signs herself "of Canada."

In the field of fiction she has contributed some noteworthy examples, which deal chiefly with the Orient. Arthur Stringer, Charles Roberts, W. A. Fraser, Thompson Seton, Archie McKishnie, Hopkins Moorhouse, Marjory Pickthall, Isabel Ecclestone Mackay, Robert Stead, Robert Watson, and latterly Marjory MacMurchy, Laura Goodman Salverson, Beaumont Cornell and Onota Watanna are much before the public eye at present. Some of these writers have won a high place internally, and, sadly enough, have forsaken their native land to live south of the line.

It has not been possible to touch on Canadian drama in this article, but already a start has been made in this field. The Little Theatre movement, begun in 1920 when the Hon. Mr. Meighen opened the Home Theatre in the Okanagan Valley, continues to grow. The Daughters of the Empire and other organizations encourage this branch of literary activity by the yearly offer of awards for Canadian plays by Canadian writers.

LATEST STUDEBAKER GEM DISPLAYED

New Customs Built Sedan to Ornament Victoria Fair in Advance of Other Centres

Through the strenuous efforts but forth by Ben Grossman, sales manager of Jameson Motors, Limited, while visiting the South Bend plant of the Studebaker Corporation of America a week ago, Victorians will have the opportunity of seeing the new Studebaker custom built sedans a month previous to any other city on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Grossman returned to Victoria Thursday after a three weeks' trip, visiting Studebaker plants at South Bend, Detroit and Walkerville. The new custom built sedans are the latest product of the Studebaker factory, and at the present time the three plants are busy endeavoring to catch up with the demand for the new models, which were only announced a month ago to the dealers. At the present time the factories are turning out 700 cars a day. The production set for July and August on the new models are 500 standard sixes and 150 big sixes and president custom built sedans. The larger cities were promised a big share of the early production, and it was only after a real struggle on the part of Mr. Grossman that he was able to obtain a single carload, which will arrave in Victoria in time for the Fall Exhibition next week.

Much Too Little

"For the first time in automotive history cars with custom beauty and custom refinement are available at the price of cars of conventional design," says Mr. Grossman. "Nowhere in the world does so high a standard of living prevail as here in Canada, and that standard is constantly being raised. People want better homes to live in, better clothing to wear, and they want more than mere transportation, they want motor cars of custom luxury, though not at the extravagant cost of the individually designed and built automobile.

"If you were to go out and order a car specially built, paying $8,000 or more, you could not secure the services of finer designers than those who have created the Studebaker custom sedans, for names which are famous throughout America for fine coachwork are today on the Studebaker staff of consultants.

"The beauty of the cars is evident at first glance," continued Mr. Grossman. "What distinction! What symmetry and pleasing contours! Victorians will have the opportunity of seeing the finest of closed cars next week at the Fair. It is absolutely useless to try and give the fine details that are embodied in the new closed cars. One must see them."

Hospitable Entertainment

While in South Bend Mr. Grossman was entertained at a dinner given by Studebaker officials. Among those who attended were Mr. A. R. Erskine, president; Mr. Paul G. Hoffman, vice-president; Howard S. Welch, foreign sales manager, and C. H. Wondries, manager commercial car division. He was also entertained by officials of the Detroit and Walkerville plants. Mr. Grossman was taken from South Bend to Chicago and entertained by Studebaker officials.

Mr. Grossman, as well as inspecting the large Studebaker factories at South Bend, which occupies six city blocks, inspected the Ford plants at Detroit and Walkerville.

The shipment of custom built sedans which will arrive this week include two standard sixes, one big six five-passenger brougham and one big six seven-passenger president sedan.

Coming Manhood in Britain Hesitates To Go Overseas

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Dr. J. A. Nairn, headmaster of the Merchant Taylors' School has been deploring the "lack of adventurous spirit" in the British youth of today. Sir Edwin Stockton, a well-known North of England business man, utters a word of defence, particularly in regard to the hesitation displayed by coming manhood to go overseas.

Prospects overseas in olden times, Sir Edwin says, were admittedly great. Promotion was relatively certain, pay was good and romance in point of surroundings existed.

Nowadays, he says, there is a good deal of changes in these respects. Promotion is dubious, since those who confer it are often not on the spot to assess the fitness; pay is often quite inadequate in the East, and there is very little romance or adventure remaining.

Frances—Did you take father apart and talk to him?

Francis—No, I didn't have to. He went all to pieces when he saw me coming.

THREE BILLION DOLLARS SAVED

Tenth Anniversary of National Savings Movement in England Marked by Demonstration in Albert Hall

PRINCE OF WALES TELLS OF GROWTH OF SERVICE

Mr. Churchill Says Actual Money Invested in Certificates Nearly Equals Amount of Pre-War National Debt

THE Albert Hall was crowded recently when the Prince of Wales presided at a demonstration to celebrate the tenth anniversay of the National Savings Movement. The Prince of Wales said in part:

"Great Britain is a country in which voluntary causes have always flourished, and it is very desirable to foster the spirit of public service on which they are based, because that spirit is one of our best assets as a nation. The National Savings Movement is an expression of this spirit of service. As such, it has become common ground for the united social activity of people to diverse views, and, relying entirely upon goodwill, it has been able to keep itself free from all distinctions of class, party, or creed. In its appeal to the individual it has one characteristic which is, at any rate, unusual: it appeals to him to put his hand in his pocket for his own special benefit, with the added inducement that by so doing he is benefiting the community at large. Charity cannot begin nearer home than that.

Three Billion Dollars

Mr. Churchill said that the actual money invested in savings certificates and in war savings certificates which preceded them exceeded £602,000,000. That was a sum almost equal to the total of the British National Debt before the war. These certificates were short-time securities, virtually payable on demand. There had been many withdrawals, but even after the withdrawals of the last few years the actual amount standing today to the credit of investors was upward of £475,000,000. He was told on high authority that even with regard to those who had sold or withdrawn their certificates the habits of thrift had persisted and that a great proportion of the money had been usefully expended either in the purchase of houses or in the education of children.

QUIETER MOOD FOR DEBT DEBATE URGED

London Newspaper Calls for Truce in Discussion of Subject at Present Time

After weeks of thorough ventilation of all aspects of the international debt question, England's last thoughts are aptly summed up by J. L. Garvin in The Sunday Observer, when he says to America: "It is your right to ask us to pay our war debts, but don't ask us to like them." This editor devotes a two-column article to the subject, beginning: "Like Lord Melbourne, we ask Mr. Churchill and Mr. Mellon, 'Why can't you leave it alone?'"

Mr. Garvin then proceeds to set forth at length the American and European views on the debt question as he sees them; voices his own backing to the proposal to wipe out all war debts and indemnities, including the German reparations, and concludes with a plea for cessation of argument until the matter can be discussed in a calmer light.

ANTI-CANCER CAMPAIGN

Aims and Objects of Founders of Movement Bearing Fruit, Says Duke of York

Speaking at the annual meeting of the British Empire Cancer Campaign, at the House of Lords, the Duke of York said the aims and objects of the founders of the movement were bearing fruit in all directions.

He was glad that the counties were endeavoring to establish their own centres, and he congratulated the Yorkshire Council on having raised nearly £100,000 and having taken steps to start their research centre in association with Leeds University.

Birmingham, he said, had already raised a fund for a similar purpose in association with their University.

HELPS WITH BUDGET

Chancellor of Exchequer Said to Receive Benefit of Wife's Ideas in Arranging Nation's Finances

Mrs. Winston Churchill, whose husband's budget proposals are being freely discussed, plays a far greater part in political life than most people realise. She not only helps Mr. Churchill to prepare his speeches, but attends the House of Commons regularly to hear him deliver them and, presumably, to criticize them afterwards.

Lately she has given much of her time and energy to helping Mr. Churchill frame his budget, a task for which very few women are fitted. But Mrs. Churchill, it has been heard said, is a born parliamentarian, and knows the ropes as well as any man.

Limbs of the Law

Khye Seng Lim and Miss Ben Hong Lim, brother and sister, were called to the bar recently at the Inner Temple, London. Not only because they are brother and sister but because of their nationality—they hail from Penang in the Straits Settlements—it is thought to be an unprecedented event. Where the new barristers will practice is not said.

Records Show Most Suicides Protestants And Fewest Hebrews

DURING his twenty-five years' service as London City Coroner, Dr. F. J. Waldo pointed out, at an inquest on Sophia Hart, a Jewess, there had been a rarity of cases of suicide among the Hebraic race. The woman was found with her head in a gas oven, and a verdict of "Suicide while of unsound mind" was returned. The coroner remarked that statistics showed that there were more suicides among Protestants than in any other religion. Next came the Greek Orthodox Church, then, very occasionally, the Roman Catholics, and finally the Hebrews. Old history showed that, up to the dispersion of the Jews, there were only ten recorded cases of suicide. Then, after they came back from Babylon, cases became rather more frequent. Only four cases of Jews committing suicide were found in the Bible. Saul, King of Israel, committed suicide by falling on his sword, and was imitated by his sword-bearer. Then, there was the case of the Jew who, on being pressed, retreated to his house, barricaded it, set it on fire, and burnt himself to death. These were the only three cases in the Old Testament. In the New Testament there was the case of Judas Iscariot, who hanged himself to a tree. There were several other cases of suicide recorded in the Bible, but they were not of Jews.

CENTRAL AFRICA HAS NEW DIAMOND MINE

Report Shows 434 Carats of Precious Stones Taken From Shores of Victoria Nyanza

In a paper presented at Pretoria to the South African Association for the Advancement of Science, Dr. Wagner, Senior Geologist of the Government Geological Survey Department, dealt with the discovery of diamonds in Tanganyika Territory, says The London Times.

Dr. Wagner said that the present rock of the fine diamonds found near Mwanza (on the southern shores of Victoria Nyanza) was without doubt basaltic Kimberlite. It was not, however, possible from the specimens he had examined to arrive at a definite conclusion with regard to the nature of the occurrence, but the indications pointed to its being a true "pipe." It was the most northerly occurrence of Kimberlite hitherto found in Africa.

In the Government report on Tanganyika for 1925, just issued, it is stated: "The year has seen the existence of a diamond 'pipe' or mine at Mabuki, Mwanza, definitely proved. In May, 1925, the proving of the ground commenced, and since then 434 carats of diamonds of a good quality have been extracted. Plant is now being installed capable of handling 400 loads a day. Around the original group approximately 130 claims have been pegged during the year over an area of some five square miles. So far, no diamonds have been found outside the limits of the original 'pipe'."

RED DISPLAY OF FLOWERS

West Ham Spendthrifts Pay $20 Weekly for Fiery Collection of Geraniums

"We may never meet again," was the lament of a member of the West Ham Board of Guardians at their last meeting. The remark expressed the opinion of most of the spendthrifts who controled the borough's relief money, says The London Mirror.

The guardians possess the finest display of red geraniums in London, the upkeep of which costs £4 a week.

In spite of the dreadful possibilities of forced economy, the members were at first in an optimistic mood when they attended their first meeting, but they were less cheerful when the inexorable facts of squandered money and the overdraft—estimated at £200,000—were revealed. They already owe the Ministry of Health £1,975,000.

Eventually the meeting was bluntly told that West Ham had about reached the end of its tether and had not enough money to last a fortnight.

By a standing order every Guardian receives a free lunch if the meeting is in session after one o'clock, and yesterday five minutes after the hour the Guardians went off to their repast.

Town of Sensible Women

Swindon, in the matter of child welfare, is second to none in the kingdom. Principally as the result of propaganda by Dr. David Brewer, its Medical Officer of Health, every expectant mother in the borough, with two exceptions, attended the ante-natal clinic last year. As Swindon is wholly an industrial area, the National Baby Week Council and kindred associations are very proud of this remarkable development.

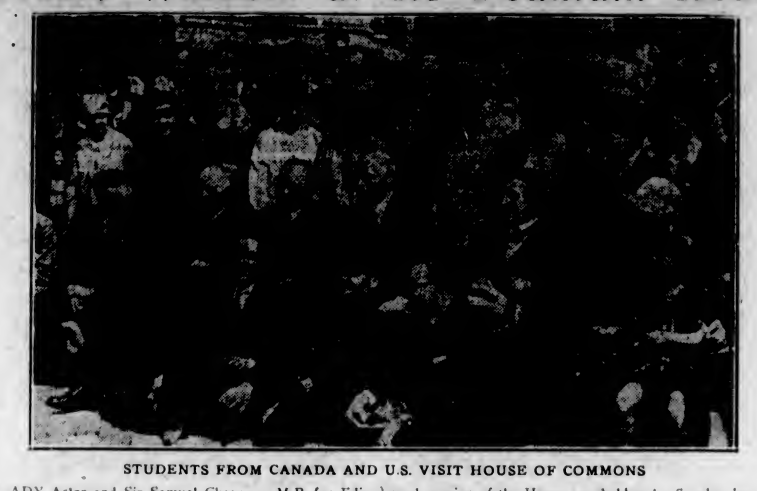
"New York Avenue"

Some Londoners laughingly refer to Shaftesbury Avenue as "New York Avenue." The reason therefor is that about seven New York shows are occupying theatres in that street.

Ban on Motor Noises

Manchester Watch Committee has instructed the Chief Constable to take stringent action against the owners of motor cars and cycles causing loud exhausts and backfires.

Flouts Wisdom at Its Fountain Head



STUDENTS FROM CANADA AND U.S. VISIT HOUSE OF COMMONS

LADY Astor and Sir Samuel Chapman, M.P. for Edinburgh, escorted a party of 150 students from Canada and the United States on the occasion of their visit to the British House of Commons. The picture shows Sir Samuel and his merry young friends grouped on the Terrace. On the occasion of this visit to the Mother of Parliaments a mock session of the House was held and a Speaker having been duly elected the routine of the House of Commons was carried out. Later in the "session" singing was indulged in, much to the offence of some of the more dignified members of the House and subsequently protests appeared in the London press to the alleged unseemly conduct of the party.

DUCHESS INTRIGUES SOCIETY QUIDNUNCS

Millicent of Sutherland Publishes American Edition of "That Fool of a Woman"

With the publication of the American edition of "That Fool of a Woman," by Millicent, Dowager Duchess of Sutherland, the reading public has a chance of answering for itself a question agitated in London society when the book was first published last April. How far is this intimate story of a woman's matrimonial adventures and reactions, in fact, the diary of a duchess? Her son, the present Duke of Sutherland, it was freely rumored here, attempted to buy up the first edition of the book, so strongly autobiographical was its flavor.

H. G. Wells' Demand

H. G. Wells, before the publication of his new novel, "The World of William Clissold," has filed a demand that those who criticize and write about books "cease to pander to that favorite amusement of vulgar, half-educated, curious, but ill-informed, people, the hunt for the imaginary 'originals' of every fictitious character." This identification of "originals" he describes as an old trick of the Victorian novelist and publisher—"an attempt to enhance interest by that faint intimation of libel."

Marked Coincidences

In the case of "That Fool of a Woman" no such protest has gone on record. The author has neither affirmed nor denied the charge that the book is autobiographical. But the coincidence of the careers of Millicent, Duchess of Sutherland, and Millicent Sutherland's "That Fool of a Woman" is as remarkable as it is suggestive.

Millicent, Duchess of Sutherland, formerly Lady Millicent Fanny St. Clair-Erskine, was born in 1867, the daughter of the fourth Earl of Rosslyn. At the age of seventeen she married the fourth Duke of Sutherland, who was then thirty-three years old. She had two sons and one daughter.

JAZZ COLORED TWEEDS

Amazing Patterns for Fall Wear Seen in London Look Like Parquet Flooring

If you see a woman wearing what is, apparently, a piece of priceless old tapestry you will know that her coat and skirt are made of the latest thing in tweeds.

You may be startled even further by mistaking a length of material destined for a sporting suit for a block of parquet flooring, for the new designs in tweeds are weird and wonderful.

Goaded into activity by the amazing patterns brought out by the silk weavers and the ultra-modern designs of the cotton manufacturers, the weavers of wool have attempted to go one better.

Even the Scottish crofters have broken loose and offered the Southerners marvellous effects in loosely woven Shetland tweeds.

INTOLERABLE NUISANCE

Circumstances Force Declaration of War on London's Flocks of Pigeons

Reluctantly the London County Council has cast itself in the role of cat among the pigeons, says The London Times. Evidence has come in from the City Corporation, the Ministry of Health, and His Majesty's Commissioner of Works, to show that the flocks at their present strength are an intolerable nuisance. They upset sanitation and they destroy masonry, sheltering themselves in such misdoings behind the Larceny Act of 1861. Now Parliament is to be invited to remove this freedom and to make their capture or destruction legal. How exactly they are to be proceeded against has yet to be decided, but, if the L.C.C. has its way, their traditional immunity will be taken from them, and they will be put nearly on the same level in the eyes of the law as that already occupied by their wild cousins of the woods.

Women More Severe

Any criminal in England who tries to play on the sympathy of women who happen to be members of the jury is ripe for a rude awakening, according to Sir Herbert Nield, K.C. Sir Herbert, who is chairman of the Middlesex Quarter Sessions, says, "One finds the fair sex far more severe than the old-fashioned jury."

Tank Registers 121.6 Fahrenheit During June Last

SUFFERERS from the heat wave may find some consolation in the fact that the inhabitants of the euphoniously named town of Tank, on the Northwestern Indian frontier, have been enjoying a warm spell, which makes the ordinary brand look like a frost.

From June 7 to the end of the same month the temperature in this town did not go below 105 degrees Fahrenheit, and in the middle of the month reached 121.6, a new high record for all India.

14,000 MILES TO SEE DAWN AT BEN NEVIS

Australian Fulfils Vow Made Thirty Years Ago to Return to Scotland

Among the pilgrims to see the sunrise on Tuesday at the summit of Ben Nevis, Scotland's highest mountain, was a West Australian who had traveled 14,000 miles for this sight. It was his first visit to Scotland since he left there, thirty years ago. He made a vow to return to Scotland and welcome the dawn on Ben Nevis. He is now a prosperous rancher.

Mountaineering pilgrims with him at the time numbered more than 500 and included Americans, Japanese, South Africans, French, Dutch and Swiss, as well as Britishers from all parts of the Isles.

INFECTED ICE CREAM CLAIMS 300 VICTIMS

Acute Gastritis Seizes Many Consumers in East End of London—Two Suspicious Deaths

Acute gastritis seized between 200 and 300 people in Poplar and Stepney recently. Two deaths from poisoning, suspected to have been caused by infected ice cream, are also reported. So numerous were the calls for medical assistance in the affected districts that every doctor over a large part of the East End of London had to give his service, and many of them were constantly on duty for thirty-six hours. Several sufferers were in a critical condition for some time. Some people affected ate ice cream sold by one street vendor. Samples of the ice cream were found to be seething with poisonous bacteria, it is alleged, and they were forwarded at once to the Ministry of Health. It was also discovered that all the people in the house where the ice cream was made have been suffering from poisoning caused by eating diseased pork.

SAVE 37,000 BABES YEARLY

Mrs. Hilton Philipson, M.P., Tells of Work in Health Centres in Britain

In recent years there has been a saving in Great Britain of 37,000 infant lives per annum—largely as a result of the work of health visitors. So said Mrs. Hilton Philipson, M.P., in an address at the Royal Sanitary Institute Congress at the Central Hall, Westminster, recently.

"For many mothers, she added, the only opportunity of getting much-needed hygienic advice was afforded by the call of the health visitors.

Miss H. S. Cooper Hogsdon said that, despite advertisements pointing out that "Babies should not have 'dummies'," there were still millions of "dummies" in use. This should not be.

Dealing with the care of children, she said that mothers who were too indulgent to their sons gave wives self-centred husbands who, because they had been thoroughly spoilt, never lifted a finger to help in the home.

Blame Volstead

Some of London's smart West End restaurants are pouring vials of wrath upon America's head, saying that the Volstead Amendment is responsible for the appearance in these cafauche cafes of spurious champagne! It is explained that an expedition fitted out in France for the purpose of running the blockade of "Rum Row" off New York became discouraged, decided to dump the counterfeit stuff nearer home and selected London

UNEARTH WINE OF RALEIGH'S TIMES

Excavations in London Bring to Light Ancient Tavern's Buried Liquid Treasures

London, priding itself upon having the finest judges of old port in the world, is now awaiting the selection of the connoisseur who has the most delicate and critical palate in order that he may pass upon the quality of the oldest bottle of wine in the city.

During excavations in Gresham Street, in the Stock Exchange district, the foundations of an ancient tavern were uncovered. Among the curios found were fifty or more clay pipes such as are found only in museums today, their short, thick stems and small bowls indicating their antiquity as well as the fact that tobacco was an expensive item in the early days of its use.

Raleigh Tobacco Pipes

A pipe such as these was smoked by Sir Walter Raleigh and early devotees of the weed against which King James wrote his famous "Counterblaste."

That coffe was also a popular beverage is shown by fragments of rare China cups bearing Oriental marks. A fine silver spoon and a bottle of wine were the chief objects of value in the ruins of the tasproom equipment.

Early English Glass

Other items included pot-bellied bottles, quart flagons and two wine glasses about eight inches high, which are examples of the earliest English glass.

The little wine bottle measures four inches in height and is made of such fragile glass that a spadeful of earth from a careless shovel might have shattered it. The wine it contains has remained intact for 200 years because the lime that covered the cork has prevented evaporation.

LIBELS ENGLISH WOMEN

Mrs. Reilly Tells Buckingham Women's Institute Her Opinion of Certain Cooks

The average English woman is the worst cook in the world, is the opinion of Mrs. L. H. Reilly, a leading member of the Buckingham Women's Institute.

"She has no idea of the proper use of sauces, and she will not use up bones and scraps," says Mrs. Reilly.

"She throws to the dog a bone from which a French woman would make a most delicious and nourishing soup.

"She throws to the chickens the scraps which the French woman would turn into a splendid stock, and gives to her children bread and dripping, where a French woman would present them with a tempting little dish made from odd pieces."

STUNG BY JELLYFISH

Hundred Mersey Bathers Attacked by Shoal and Two People Collapse

One hundred bathers in the Mersey were stung by a school of jellyfish during the height of the heat wave.

Some were badly stung, and over eighty cases were dealt with in under two hours at the Red Cross station situated near the bathing station at Wallasey.

Several hundred people were in the water when a shoal of the jellyfish appeared, and created great excitement.

Many of the bathers screamed and swam to the shore.

One girl who was stung was in a state of collapse for some time, and a policeman, who had been training for a police gala, also collapsed and had to be taken home after receiving medical aid.

Some difficulty was experienced in bringing him round.

"QUALITY OF MERCY"

Man in Dock Quotes Shakespeare's Speech for Benefit of Long-Suffering Judge

At full length the "quality of mercy" speech from "The Merchant of Venice" was quoted by a man in the dock at the Old Bailey recently.

He was Harry Denys Gerrard, who was sentenced to four months in the second division for conspiring to obtain charitable contributions by fraud. Lawrie Greig was sentenced to twelve months' hard labor and John M. Strachan to six months in the second division.

Gerrard made a long speech asking the judge to be merciful to him on account of the tragedies of his life and in view of his delicate health.

Shopgirl Presented At Court and Reports For Work as Usual

A LONDON shopgirl has gained distinction by curtseying to the King and Queen at a Royal Court one evening and showing up for work the next morning as usual. She is Miss Dorothy Knaggs, daughter of Lady Knaggs, and she has been working in a large West-End store.

Miss Knaggs has a bent for designing and drawing. One day last Winter she stepped into a store with some of her own sketches under her arm. These were her only credentials. She displayed her work to the chief of the "Help Hired Here" department, and the next day at 8 a.m. appeared as one of the artists of the designing department. She has held her position ever since.

Few of the other shopgirls know that Miss Knaggs, when her day's work is over, goes to a Mayfair mansion, the front door of which is opened for her by a butler in knee breeches.

New Empire House

The Prince of Wales opened Empire House, the new headquarters of the British Empire Service League in London. The premises are situated in King Street, Baker Street, and provide excellent accommodation for the work of the League and the production of its official organ, Our Empire magazine. The Grand President, Field-Marshal Lord Haig, presided at the opening ceremony, and read congratulatory telegrams received from the Prime Ministers of Australia, New Zealand, Canada and Newfoundland, and from Lieut.-General Sir Percy Lake, of Victoria, B.C., president of the Canadian Legion.

DUBLIN BUYS "IRISH" BACON FROM CHINA

South Ireland Curer Testifies to Results of Walk Through Streets of Capital

Ireland, which always has prided itself on its bacon, has received considerable of a shock in learning that all the bacon sold in Ireland is not Irish, and that some of it comes from even as far away as China.

Testifying before the Free State Food Tribunal, Joseph Slattery, a noted Southern curer, said that while walking down one of Dublin's leading streets, he counted twelve different pig nationalities in shop windows. One of these was Chinese.

Mr. Slattery said that a priest from California, who recently was his guest at Tralee, commented on the fine flavor of the bacon at breakfast and wished he could get such good meat in America.

"The bacon you are eating," Mr. Slattery said he replied, "is from Minneapolis, and I am just trying it out."

ROYAL THRIFT SOCIETY

His Majesty Sets Practical Example to Nation of Timely Economies

"His Majesty has lately approved the formation of a savings association in the Royal Household of which both he and the Queen have consented to be members," was the statement made by the Prince of Wales at a recent meeting in London of the National Savings Movement.

During his reign, the King has set his people many practical examples of economy, and a further proof of His Majesty's anxiety to relieve the straitened finances of the country is revealed by the recently issued civil service estimates, which show a saving of £42,500 on the upkeep of the royal palaces as compared with last year.

Palaces in the actual occupation of the King—Windsor Castle, Buckingham Palace, Frogmore and Marlborough House—are to be granted £45,500 as against £55,000 in 1925. The total of the grant to be made to all the royal palaces, including those not in the King's occupation, is £107,550. Last year the allowance was £120,140.

LUGGAGE KNEW BETTER

Lord Aberdeen Recounts Amusing Scottish Story in "Tell Me Another"

In "Tell Me Another," Lord Aberdeen has a collection of amusing stories, of which the following is a sample. A traveler had to change trains at Perth, and he told a porter to put his luggage into the right train while he went and had a cup of tea. When in the refreshment room a bell clanged and he rushed out, and got into what he thought was his train. As the train moved out he noticed his luggage on the platform with the porter standing by it. Irritated, he called out, "You silly fool, why didn't you put my luggage in?" To this the porter—also now annoyed—shouted back, "Your luggage is nae sich a fool as yersel'; you're in the wrang train."

British Motor Roads

British roads for motor cars are to be beautified. The County of Middlesex, through which the routes from London to the north of England pass, is preparing to plant red and white chestnuts, oaks, limes, ash, beeches, Cornish elms and Norwegian maples at the sides of thirty miles of motor roads. The trees will be planted twenty yards apart, and each avenue will be about one mile in length. Nearly five thousand trees will be required.

Married Seventy Years

"Silver," "golden" and "diamond" weddings are common events, but few have heard of a "pearl" wedding. This unique occasion has just been celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. George Webb, of Lacock, near Chippenham, who were married exactly seventy years ago.

IS SEQUEL TO WRITER'S ATTACK

Warfare of Words Between Gladstone's Son and Barrister - Cowboy - Journalist Ends in Court Verdict

WRITER EXPELLED FROM CLUB GETS DAMAGES

Action Unique in British Law Results in Court Verdict for Loss of Reputation by Expulsion

THROUGH the channel of the King's Bench Division, and by an action believed to be unique in British legal history, the floodgates of political memory have been opened.

Damages for alleged wrongful expulsion were claimed from the Bath Club, London, by Capt. Peter Emanuel Wright, who has been in turn barrister, journalist, cowboy and a secretary on the Supreme War Council.

Capt. Wright has written three books, and the last of them, entitled "Portraits and Criticisms," contained a reference to the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone.

Family Objections

To these particular passages strong exception was taken by the dead statesman's son, Viscount Gladstone, and other members of the family.

Acrimonious correspondence followed, and in one letter the terms "coward," "liar," and "fool" were employed.

The upshot was the expulsion of Capt. Wright from the Bath Club, of which Lord Desborough is president, and of the committee of which Lord Gladstone has been a member since its foundation.

A verdict was eventually returned for Capt Wright, with total damages of £125 for loss of club amenities and including £25 for loss of reputation.

ABSTEMIOUS HOUSE OF LORDS VISIONED

Wine Contractor Attests Restricted Supply of Alcoholic Beverages to Upper House

The opinion expressed in "Iolanthe" that "the peerage is not destitute of virtue" is now endorsed by no less a personage than the contractor who supplies the wines to the House of Lords dining-room.

"A little white wine and an occasional glass of whisky and soda" is how Leonard Adams, head of the firm which supplies the House of Lords with liquors, describes the alcoholic predilections of the upper house. Mr. Adams also reports that with the war receding into history the Lords are drinking German hock again. The peers of the realm, according to the man who should know, can't afford champagne these days.

A HEAVYWEIGHT BABY

London Doctor Puzzled at Heft of Eight-Months-Old Bethnal Green Kiddie

London's borough of Bethnal Green lays claim to one of the finest babies in the kingdom in the person of Georgie Evesden. This exceptional child weighed 12½ pounds when he was born, in Globe Road, eight months ago, and now he pulls the scale down at just over two stone. "The doctor," remarked the proud mother, "says he cannot account for our baby's abnormal growth, but as he can find nothing wrong with him we do not worry." The parents are not above the normal in weight or height, but Mr. Evesden's mother is exceptionally tall, and weighs twenty stone. The average weight for a newly-born child in England is eight pounds, and at eight months of age a baby is normally eighteen pounds.

FLY CONFOUNDED ARTIST

Sir Frank Dicksee Tells How Brother Painter's Criticism Was Brought to Naught

Here is a good story told by Sir Frank Dicksee.

A supposed art critic, speaking at one academy show of the virtues of this painting and the faults of that one, finally came to a picture in the gallery and said to his smiling, if slightly bored, companion:

"Now, you see in this picture the artists has not learned his trade—it lacks technique and understanding. His trees seem to have no form—they do not stand up; the grass has no color. His clouds look like bits of paper stuck on the canvas. And here, you see, he has resorted to a trick to catch the public eye, by attempting to paint a fly. Now, I would not object to a fly, had he been able to make it look like a fly. This fly looks like a lump of mud and hasn't the character of a fly."

At this point the fly, tired of the critic's ramblings, took wing and flew away.

TWO MILLION DEBTOR

Bankrupt Lord Said to Owe Clients £420,480, With Alleged Assets of £200,000

Proofs of debts amounting to £420,480 were dealt with by the Official Receiver at a meeting of creditors of Lord Terrington at the London Bankruptcy Court recently.

The Official Receiver said that Lord Terrington had not surrendered to the proceedings. Lord Terrington's assets comprised book debts to which he attached the value of £200,000. He claimed to be solvent subject to the realisation of the assets.

It was obvious, said the Official Receiver, from the large amounts owing to clients that there was something which called for immediate explanation. The meeting passed a resolution of bankruptcy.

The Fugitive From Finley's Alley

By AGNES SLIGH TURNBULL

Illustrated by Paul Brown

HE was a tramp—ragged, dirty, unkempt, with the half-suspicious, half-surly manner that comes from continued painful contacts with life. His brown eyes were all that gave the lie to his general disreputable appearance, and most people did not trouble to look at them until they had given him a quick kick or cuff. Then it was too late, for the shaggy curtain of his brows was drawn, and the snarl he had been forced to cultivate in self-defence was revealing his white teeth instead.

Nobody but a stray child here and there had ever discovered those limpid brown pools of absolute longing which were in his eyes. For the strange cosmic scheme of things he had been perfectly made, this homeless, friendless tramp, for one end and one only—to love, to worship, to serve loyally a master.

And here among the garbage pails and ash cans of Finley's Alley he slunk, furtive, watchful, ready to snarl and run at a danger signal, ready to fight for a bite of mouldy bread or other questionable scraps—anything that would prolong his life and thereby prolong the quest which the speck of sentient matter within his tattered, tired little body never gave up. Somewhere—vaguely, dumbly he sensed it—somewhere his god must be waiting, and he must seek to find him.

On this June morning he scudded at last out of Finley's Alley, evaded a hurtling stone by a hair's breadth, and turned into a road that led out of the city. He trotted alertly along until the weeds appeared at the edge of the macadam and autos became less plentiful; then he ran close to the fences, nose sniffing, eyes peering. Even though he had to return to the Finley's Alley region at night for a bite to eat, he would wander now in sweet-smelling grasses, where small, soft, quick bodies were always darting here and there.

So ran the little tramp dog, his four bruised paws thudding softly, that tiny sentient spark within him always pressing on yearningly, but no part of him suspecting that on this golden June day there lay waiting for him just around the corner death and fear and flight and freedom and joy supreme, and the end of the quest!

Approaching a Crisis

At that moment, in one of the neat suburban residences which had been advertised as "Dutch Colonial, six rooms, tiled bath, fireplace, garage, cash deposit, balance as rent," there was approaching a crisis. Dan Hastings knew it as he slowly dressed for the day. He wondered if Helene realized it too. She had been early astir, and with few words, except that she must go to the city that morning and buy one or two last things, had hurried down to get breakfast.

The bedroom was large, but it seemed to Dan to be choked with garments. A trunk, half filled, stood near the door; the trays, already packed, lay on either side. On every chair were dresses, skirts, hats, shoes.

The whole house, indeed, had had for a week the dusty, disordered look which a house acquires when left entirely to care for itself. There had been shopping and sewing, and more shopping and sewing; there had been dinners hastily prepared and carelessly cleared away; there had been quick words and still more deadly silences. And all this because Helene was going to Maine.

It was on a day in April that the letter had come from Helene's aunt Marcia. Dan had come home early to work in the garden, of which he was inordinately fond. A home of their own! A garden! No boarding-house stuff that Summer. Fresh peas and beans and lettuce of his own raising! And sweet peas and nasturtiums for Helene to gather for the house! He had begun to plan for the garden in January, to Helene's great amusement. He had pored over catalogues and sketched his careful diagrams long before it was time to turn over the first spadeful of earth.

He had come home jubilantly this evening with six more packages of seed and a rambler rosebush for the porch, to find Helene waiting for him, radiant. His heart leaped as it always did at her bright beauty. Hair like golden mist, eyes like the sky!

"Dan!" she had cried, without waiting to look at the rose bush. "What do you think? I've had a letter from Aunt Marcia! Listen, I'll read it!"

Aunt Marcia wrote that she would expect Helene as usual from the second week of June till the first of September, and Dan also for his two weeks' vacation the last of August. She did not expressly state it, but there lurked in the letter the suggestion that any girl who had kept house for six months, without a cook and a butler and two maids, such as Aunt Marcia herself had, must be a wreck.

Helene was to reply promptly, so that the other girls who always came at various times through the Summer to visit with her, could be invited and dates arranged. She was also to bring more party dresses this Summer than usual, because there were to be weekly dinner dances at one of the hotels.

"Isn't It Too Glorious"

Dan stared in heavy amazed silence as Helene finished the letter and cried, "Isn't it too glorious? I didn't know whether she would keep on inviting me now that I'm married!"

Dan stood still, looking down at her, the rosebush in his hand, the seed envelopes protruding from his pocket.

"But, Helene, you don't mean you're going for all Summer!"

Helene's blue eyes changed expression, her lips fell rather too easily into a pout. The amazement was now transferred to her face.

"Going! Why, Dan, what do you mean? Would you want me to stay here all through the awful heat, just to cook your meals? And miss all this wonderful time just because you have to stay? Why, Dan—" her voice was half reproachful, half indignant—. "I never dreamed you wouldn't be delighted that I have the chance!"

"But—the garden! You won't be here for any of the— What'll be the good of it now? And you know we were going to get the awning for the porch and those chairs—and fix the lawn all up— Of course I want you to have a nice vacation. I'd counted on your being away a month; but, Helene, this is all Summer!"

They discussed it that evening; Helene, petulant and eager by turns, setting forth all the delights of the visit; Dan, listening, anxious, hurt, then repeating again and again his first amazed expostulations.

In the end, however, Helene wept bitterly, and Dan kissed away the tears and said that of course she must go; he would get along somehow.

But after they had gone to bed and Helene was breathing with comfortable regularity, her hair spread like golden mist upon her pillow, Dan had lain awake for a long time, thinking. There was something wrong. Marriage was not what he had dreamed it would be—a blissful partnership. There had been growing, he knew it now, all through the months, a vague feeling of something lacking, something fine and sweet and essential.

His loyal, loving heart had brushed the thought aside before. How dared he harbor it in connection with Helene! The little dancing fairy! Lovelier in his eyes than anything of which he had dreamed! Helene, who had consented—wonder past belief—to become his wife! It had been a brief and ardent wooing, climaxed by the resplendent wedding of last Fall.

It was not till the tender, blind worship of the honeymoon was over and they were settled in the Dutch Colonial that Dan began to find a small, wistful feeling growing. He had worked hard, he had put himself through college, he had made a place for himself in the world of business; it looked as though some day there might come real wealth. But never since his boyhood had there been anyone to give him the little endearments, the foolish solicitudes which mothers give—and wives. He knew what it was to be homeless, to be very ill in a city boarding-house, and have nobody to care, to be weary and discouraged when night came, and have no haven of sympathy and cheer.

So, deep in his heart, as he gave all the strength of his love to Helene, he had kept certain shame-faced expectations, built upon what he imagined a wife would mean to him.

But they were not fulfilled. Helene seemed to assume that husbands were made to serve and give and do as a matter of course. It never appeared to enter her pretty golden head that there was such a thing as reciprocity.

Yearning Grows Greater

One February night, when Dan and Will Carson, a neighbor, had walked from the station through a sudden drenching rain, the yearning in his heart had grown greater than ever.

"Holy mackerel!" Will had sputtered, as he pulled his hat further over his face. "Won't we he the coddled little boys when we get home? Gee, Amy will have me in bed with hot water bottles if I don't stop her! Women are all alike—always fussing over a fellow!"

Will's tone had in it the proper masculine contempt for such weakness, but beneath it poor Dan caught the triumphant note of a man who knew he was loved! Who, in spite of his lordly disclaiming of attention, would inwardly gloat over every precious, foolish feminine fear for his health and safety.

Helene on that occasion had not thought of the rain in his connection at all, though she showed concern later when she found his wet shoes on the light bedside rug.

Of course Dan stoutly maintained to himself it was a man's place to take care of a woman and be solicitous about her. Any man who didn't carry more than half the burden was no man at all. Oh, he ridiculed himself mercilessly. And yet—that longing, lonely corner of his heart!

As Dan lay awake this Spring night his heart was sore. This visit of Helene's! How could she do such a thing? She knew how he had worked and planned for the garden! How could she go away for three months and leave him alone? Their first Summer!

And without allowing the words to form, Dan knew in the back of his brain that, instead of a comrade, a woman, steady and true of heart, ready out of her devotion to sacrifice something for him, as he was to love her to the uttermost, Helene, with all her bright beauty, was a child, with a child's self-centred desires, a child's lack of sympathy and understanding. A child to be petted and caressed and served by him. Did Helene really love him? Was she capable of love? And, ghastly thought, if she was not, would his own love for her endure. Could it? Dan buried his face in the pillow while waves of bitter fear swept over him.

Pleasing Prospect

The next morning Helene was bright and full of carelessly happy plans for her trip. She would need new clothes, quite a number. Where would Dan take his meals? He could easily find some good place. Remember she wanted a letter every day and a special delivery on Sunday. She didn't want the girls to think he was any less attentive now than before they were married.

In the end Dan wrote a cheque for the wardrobe that made him wince a little, and the price of the awning and the porch chairs went into Helene's beaded bag to pay for the trip and provide spending money during the Summer.

Then, toward the middle of May, there came to Dan a hot, hard day in the office, a blinding headache, with the heavy weight still on his heart and the long, lonely Summer foreshadowing him. He knew when he got home that something more than ordinary weariness was the matter. Even Helene was startled. But her cry, "Oh, Dan, you're not going to get sick now!" somehow did not ease the pain.

The doctor came, pronounced it Summer flu, a light attack— a week in bed, possibly—not longer. Helene fluttered about. She told the doctor, nervously, appealingly, about her trip. The old man, falling under the spell of her blue eyes, as most men did, patted her shoulder reassuringly.

"Now, don't you worry, little girl! We'll have him out of here in a few days. You'll get your visit all right."

The doctor's medicine was efficacious. In a week's time Dan, rather pale and shaky, was out of bed. Helene had been a careful is somewhat distracted nurse. There had been an afternoon's shopping and a vast amount of planning, and delicate stitching on this and that. One day as she hurried past the bed with a collar and cuff set she was working on, he reached for her hand and laid it across his eyes. Her cool, soft little palm!

But Helene only said, "If your head starts to ache, I'm to give you one of the white tablets."

On the doctor's last visit he prescribed for the patient plenty of eggs and milk, with a round of golf each morning before Dan started for the office and very light work for some time to come.

Dan felt weak. He hated himself for hoping, but each day, as he came home from his short experimental walks and threw himself down wearily on the davenport, he hoped that Helene would come to him, would say the words that would knit their hearts together, establish the perfect bond, lift the barrier.

But Helene was busy working on a hemstitched voile dress. She left it those days only to prepare their hasty meals.

"Why, Dan!"

As May moved brightly on its way to June, Dan grew more and more quiet, as Helene grew more busy and nervous and irritable over her preparations. After his first day back in the office, he was exhausted. It was hard to make himself eat. What would it be in a restaurant?"

"Helene," he said slowly one evening "It's going to be pretty hard without you. You don't suppose you could wait a few weeks longer till I get a little bit more on my feet?"

Helene's blue eyes went wide with distress. "Why, Dan, now when I'm all ready! You know Aunt Marcia wouldn't like it. She's having Maud Warren there the first two weeks for me. It would be awful for me not to go when she has everything planned! And it would just break my heart to miss Maud. Why Dan!" The voice was full of anguished reproach. "If you were really ill! But the doctor said all you needed was to get out more in the fresh air and not to work so hard!"

So Dan went on keeping his own counsel. Each morning he drove dutifully to the public golf course in Lockwood Park. He tried to get back some of his old energy, his enthusiasm for the game, but he had to stop after three holes. He worked as little in the office as his conscientious soul would permit, and reached home each evening as dead tired as he had been the night before. He was not gaining strength. And in his dispirited heart he felt that no one in the world cared.

One frail hope alone occasionally projected itself; Dan wondered in his earnest, just, seeking soul, whether he might be misjudging Helene. Was it possible that far beneath her careless exterior there lay a tenderness asleep?

Could it be that the petted, spoiled, care-free years of her girlhood had imposed upon her merely a veneer of selfishness for which she was not in truth responsible?

But this hope always flickered and went out in the face of the daily facts.

His outward relationship with Helene had grown mechanical. He tried to acknowledge with animation that her dresses were pretty, her new sweater becoming; he consulted time-tables, ordered her reservation, promised to write every day. He tried honestly to see her side—every reason for her going. He called himself weak, silly, exacting. But under it all was the heavy fear that a crisis was coming, was almost here—a time when something dark and impenetrable would shut his heart away from Helene's and leave between them nothing but empty physical contacts.

The Little Tramp Dog

It was with this thought upon him that he dressed slowly on the morning of the day before Helene left. It was still with him as he kissed her good-bye and started for the golf course. She was going into the city as soon as he left for the last purchase, so when he brought the car back to the house she would be gone.

Dan drove slowly through the fresh, early morning air. Sweet odors were abroad even on the traveled highway. It was a time for hearts to love and rejoice. And his own had never been more heavy.

And because there was nobody to see or hear, he buried his face in the dog's dusty ragged coat and let the tension break.

He reached the links and found, early though it was, a half-dozen men before him. He tried to interest himself in the teeing off; he concentrated on following each ball.

Suddenly, as the sixth man stood poised, there was a shout from the driveway that skirted the small lake and the woods. After the shout there was visible a small ragged object, ears back, tail down, chest straining, coming like a dusty streak along the drive. It was a dog, running for its life.

Dan walked across the short plateau to see better. Another shout made up of unintelligible words came from just around the curve, and after it a policeman, stout, red of face, glaring of eye, his fingers clutching a metal object that shone in the sun. Dan stepped quickly out in the road. Something in the small, forlorn, desperate figure fleeing from the big policeman and the shining object touched him. He held out one hand and motioned gently.

In one brief, amazed flash up came the limpid brown eyes of the little tramp dog. For the first time in his starved, friendless, knocked-about life he saw a human haven of refuge. Swiftly as an arrow to its mark the bruised feet carried him straight to Dan; he jumped up and licked the outstretched hand with queer, stifled barks, then cowered, shivering, close to Dan's legs.

Dan picked him up as the red policeman approached.

"What's the trouble officer?" he inquired.

The large man grew more apoplectic.

"Trouble! I been chasin' that darn dog all over this here park! I took him in them woods over there to shoot him, an' he got away from me! I'll see to it that he don't do it again. Much obliged for ketchin' him."

He came closer. The dog trembled violently. Under the shaggy brow one brown eye, pleading, looked up at Dan.

"What's he done, officer? Why were you going to kill him?"

"Done! Why, he ain't no good. He don't belong to nobody. He's a tramp, he is; I'm going to shoot him. He'll mebbe go mad an' bite somebody."

"Well," Dan said, "I hate to hand him over to be shot. If there's nothing wrong with the dog except that he has no home, I'll remedy that. I'll take him with me."

"I tell you he ain't no good! If he goes mad an' bites somebody, I'll arrest you! You mind that!"

"All right," Dan said equably. "It's a bargain."

The policeman put up his revolver, and Dan, carrying his charge, turned, picked up his golf bag and went to his car. A queer elation filled him. He had won the sharp contest, and here was a small living creature that seemed to appreciate his efforts.

Starving Waif's Devotion

As he drove home, the dog snuggled close to him, rubbing against his arm, scarcely moving the brown eyes from his face.

He put the car in the garage, lifted the waif from the seat and led the way to the house. The little beggar was probably starved. It was a right good thing Helene was gone, he thought, as he let himself into the kitchen. He brought cold meat and milk and placed them on the floor.

And then, at last, the little tramp dog knew beyond a shadow of doubt that he had come home. Home to the end of his quest. Home to a master from whose hand he would be fed, whose hearthstone he would guard with his very life. And with only a glance at the food, he flung himself upon the man who knelt beside him. He licked his face, his hands; he leaped upon him, he barked his starved, lonely heart out in joyous yelpings, he grovcled in every form of worshipful contortion, he looked up at his god with brown eyes of utter adoration.

And as he watched, something strange happened to Dan. He was physically weak, he was nervously exhausted, he was hurt and lonely and love-hungry. And because there was no one to see or hear, he buried his face in the dog's dusty, ragged coat and let the tension break. His shoulders heaved. He heard his own voice in foolish, choking sentences.

"You little loyal mutt! You care what happens to me! You care! I know! You'll never leave me! You'll follow me to the corner in the mornings and watch me out of sight! And you'll be here when I come home evenings. You'll be looking out for me and be restless and anxious if I'm late. Then you'll run to meet me, and jump and whine and lick my hands." Dan's voice broke in a great sob as he held the small body to him. "You'll love me, you loyal little mutt! You'll love me!"

Now, if the iceman had not been late and the milkman had not arrived with his bill that morning, there would have been no witness to this extraordinary scene taking place upon the kitchen floor. As it was, however, there had been the delays which every housekeeper experiences when trying to get an early start from home.

When Dan drove into the garage, Helene had only just closed the kitchen door and reached her room to change her dress. She heard the door open, and came to the landing on the back stairs and peered down. And then as she saw—and heard—her face grew flushed, and then turned deadly white. Her hands clutched the railings, her eyes, strained, intense, were riveted on the scene below.

Had the neat garden just outside been suddenly rent by an earthquake there would not have come upon Helene a more astounded terror than she felt at that moment.

Dan, the strong, the unfailing, the self-contained! Quiet, steady, unchangeable Dan!—who had never in all her knowledge of him lost his self-control or his firm poise by a hair's breath! To see him now, broken, shaken, clasping to his breast a strange, dirty dog! To hear his voice—Dan's low, sure, comforting voice—now sobbing. Crying out for love, with that agonized loneliness.

It was as though the solid foundations of her life had given away. It was as though the great forces of pain and despair, which had been to her before but vague names, were now beating upon Dan, under her very eyes, with strong, merciless, living hands, and with every blow she felt her own heart smitten.

To save him! To shield him from these monsters! To bring back to him gladness and strength! And oh, to lift from herself this new burden of crushing guilt!

And with the thought something happened also to Helene. The springs of the maternal, that deep, undefiled fountain, welled up within her. Suddenly the stream of love such as every good woman knows for the man or the children who are hers, the love that comforts, that sustains, that yearns over and cheers, that knows both the glad hope of the joyous day and the tender fears of the night watches, the love that never faileth—such a stream came flowing through the arid, selfish little heart of Helene as miraculously as the water rolled from the rock under the rod of the prophet.

She took a quick step down, then turned and softly fled back to the stairs.

Dan pulled himself together at last, with the shame any strong man feels when he has given way to his emotions.

The dog ate greedily now, and then trotted happily behind him to the garage, where Dan left him with some extra food before hurrying off to the station.

A Great Shining Moment

That day marked the crest of the early heat wave. Stifling! Intolerable! The city steamed and glared and blistered. Dan tried to work, but strange black spots kept dodging in front of his eyes. In spite of the pleasurable feeling in his heart caused by the dog, his mind kept traveling wearily in its old circles. Their life together—Helene's and his. What were they going to make of it?

At four o'clock he left for home. At five he was starting up the street that led to the Dutch Colonial. He wondered how the new occupant of the garage had spent the day—if Helene had finished packing—if she had time to prepare anything tasty for dinner. Not that it mattered much with the little appetite he had.

He had come in sight of the house. He looked up at it, as he always did at this spot. Then he stopped, startled. He rubbed his eyes, he muttered to himself, then started hastily forward. Was there something wrong with his head? One, two, three, four from the corner—that was certainly his house. But why—how—what the—

This house he was regarding was not the one he had left that morning. This house had a lawn that had been freshly sprinkled. The steps that led to the front door were damp and clean. And the porch! Could it be? Instead of the bare, dusty spot of the morning, here was a cool refuge for a hot, tired man. A wide awning of the very pattern he had admired gave a comfortable shade, a big green fern flanked the steps and, yes, beyond were two deep, easy porch chairs.

Then his eye caught the last detail. On the lowest step, one ear cocked, waiting, eager, sat the small tramp dog! But, oh, no longer a tramp. A gentleman dog now, from his clean-washed, shining brown head to the tip of his smooth-brushed tail. He had caught sight of his master. Like a streak of living joy he came toward him.

Dan's heart was pounding with a fearful ecstacy. He climbed the steps, he reached the door. There, in the new hemstitched voile, was Helene—hair like golden mist, eyes like the sky, lips tremulously tender.

She reached up and drew his head, hot, aching, city-grimed, down to the curve of her soft shoulder. Her cool little hands stroked his cheek. He heard her voice, the voice of a woman, a wife who loves even as she is loved, whispering brokenly:

"Dan, dearest, I'm not going! I'm staying here with you—to make you happy—I love you so, Dan—I love you—"

And even in this, the great, shining moment of his life, as he held his wife to him and felt again the thrill of love, confident and supreme, Dan remembered to reach a hand down to meet the eager brown head of the dog that was raised to its god.

"I tell you he ain't no good. If he goes mad an' bites somebody, I'll arrest you! Mind that!"

Sailors Cling to Superstitions

STEAM and the wireless have cured the sailor of many of his old-time superstitions, but if he has ever served under sail there are some to which he still clings. He dislikes to see St. Elmo's lights or "Corpsants," as he calls them, and he has not yet conquered his aversion to a corpse in the cargo or a "sky pilot" as a passenger, feeling sure that either will bring bad luck to the ship.

The man at the wheel is supposed to be unable to steer straight if there is a cross-eyed person aboard. The ancient prejudice against carrying women on a "wind-jammer" or man-o'-war extends to feminine names, and a ship named for a woman is sure to be unlucky, though a female figurehead has been thought to bring good fortune.

Blue paint is also unpopular with seafaring men, who dislike to join a vessel having any part of her painted blue, and a Scotch sea captain once refused to let an apprentice come aboard because he was carrying his worldly possessions in a blue box. The construction of a ship is still believed by many mariners to forecast her whole future, and if she sticks on the ways and is reluctant to be launched, a dark fate is predicted for her.

A sailor may sing but he seldom whistles, for whistling is supposed to bring a hurricane, and many a cabin boy has had his ears cuffed for puckering up his lips. To turn a hatch upside down on deck invites misfortune, and Mother Carey's chickens flying between the masts betoken evil. To break a looking-glass means a broken mast and a broken tumbler foretells a shattered compass. A sneeze indicates bad luck unless one sneezes to the right.

Friday has lost much of its terror for the deep-sea sailor since so many ocean liners have made it their sailing day with no disastrous results, but there are old salts still living who consider it a "hoodoo." The Spanish sailor, on the contrary, regards Friday as extremely lucky, perhaps in part because Columbus started on his voyage of discovery on Friday.

Sharks following a ship means a death on board; gulls are believed to be the souls of drowned sailors; and odd numbers are lucky. When a pig was killed in other days and the captain wanted the wind to blow from a certain quarter, he had the animal killed with its nose in that direction. Pets are believed to bring good luck, which may partly account for their popularity with sailors; and, conversely, to sail without a mascot of some kind is a risky thing for a mariner to do.

The bad luck that attended the U.S.S. Texas was attributed by old men-o'-warsmen to the fact that she had no mascot. Geese as mascots have a bad reputation with sailors. And most seamen believe that if a cat falls overboard and is drowned the vessel is doomed.

Ice "Coin" Cheats Meter

A French electrical concern recently discovered a unique method by which it had been defrauded, says The Dearborn Independent. A consumer had frozen water in molds to the diameter and weight of a coin and had slipped this bit of ice through the franc-in-the-slot meter. The ice melted after a short time and left no trace.

"Imprisoned Wives" and Distant Fields of Romance

Some of the After-Effects of "Matrimonial Measles"—Leisure Which Sows Discontent and Gives the New Freedom a Black Eye—The Ratio Between Talking and Sinning

"The modern woman wants freedom. Why? Freedom to do wrong? Oh, yes, in some cases. But in still more cases she wants freedom to do right. Whether man likes it or not, woman has reached a stage in her development where she is determined to exercise her own God-given right of choice, which was for centuries denied her by man. She is determined to face the facts of life as they are and not as she has always been told to believe they are by tradition and authority, let the church and astonished husbands say what they will."

"Of course, woman wants to be attractive to man, despite the dire forebodings of those men who predicted in turn that education, the vote, and economic independence would 'unsex' her. Woman always has wanted to be attractive to man and always will. Was there ever a woman who wouldn't much prefer beauty to brains? I do not know. But I do know some who have both.

"But, you see, while she can convince herself that she has brains by passing better examinations than the boys, how can she be convinced that she has beauty unless she passes the examination of the boys?

"And having formed the habit of being attractive to men in her youth, and having studied the art of pleasing, the only art we used to approve of her pursuing, having perfected this most important art while (more or less) young, must a woman, merely because she is married, abandon the oldest and most interesting art in the world? Well, maybe she ought to, but she doesn't. Not yet, and she never will."

I HAVE heard marriage referred to as a cage. Innocent, eager mates are lured into it by the bait of love and then when the bait is eaten and they would like to escape and try their wings, they discover, too late, that the door is closed and locked. They are prisoners for life. So we are told—at least by those who are a prey to what I described in a recent article as "Matrimonial Measles."

Well, it may be as bad as that in some cases, though they are not so likely to remain prisoners for life nowadays—obviously not; one marriage in every nine in America ends in divorce.

"Distant fields are always greenest." That is almost as old as the English language, like "Forbidden fruit is sweetest." That may be true, but—if we are going to size life up by quoting literature—so is "Distance lends enchantment," and often the chief attraction of forbidden fruit is the simple fact that it is forbidden.

Now suppose the door of the cage is flung open. Suppose more of our "imprisoned" wives are allowed to fly out to the distant fields and take a look at that forbidden fruit. Then what?

Mating, Mismating and Remating

It would be foolish to say that the distant fields are invariably dreary and disillusionizing upon a closer inspection, or that the forbidden fruit will necessarily prove rotten, and that, having tried their wings, all wives would want to come flying back to their wedded mates in the dear old cage.

Not in the least. So long as we have mating, we are going to have mismating and, therefore, remating. If marriage is necessary for civilized society, so is divorce. That seems axiomatic to me and to all others who think well enough of marriage to believe that its high and holy purposes cannot be attained merely by staying unmarried. Holy matrimony should be something better than a vulgar endurance contest.

But I do say that in nine cases out of ten, or even nine and a half, where the marriage was founded upon a fairly solid foundation, it is not the cage, it is the door, that closed door, that causes most of the trouble.

"They talk too much, these idle, discontented women, both the young ones and the overgrown flappers."

This is what the average modern wife objects to. Woman is no longer property, despite the implications of the marriage ceremony with its "Who giveth this woman" and all the other archaic insults clothed in beautiful, sonorous English.

Viewing Woman With Alarm

The modern woman wants freedom. Why? Freedom to do wrong? Oh, yes, in some cases. But in still more cases she wants freedom to do right.

Whether man likes it or not, woman has reached a stage in her development where she is determined to exercise her own God-given right of choice, which was for centuries denied her by man. She is determined to face the facts of life as they are and not as she has always been told to believe they are by tradition and authority, let the church and astonished husbands say what they will.

Every change in the status of woman, since she was first granted a soul and a seat at our dinner tables, has been "viewed with alarm" by the so-called "Superior Sex." Even I can remember when it was hardly the thing for girls, our "nicest" girls, to be educated, really educated. It was not exactly "lady-like" to go to college—"strong-minded."

Today, however, one woman in every seven earns her own living by some other means than matrimony. Women as a class have always done the greater share of the work of the world, including the most important and dangerous work known to the race, namely, bearing it.

Class-Consciousness

But she isn't paid for that (as yet) and wasn't paid for any of her other jobs either until recent times. The majority of them to this day are obliged to exist upon the bounty of some man, living or dead. But enough of them are earning their livings now to change the status of all of them.

Among other changes, being now educated, she is quite aware of the facts and implications of the foregoing summary. She has become sex-conscious in other ways than merely being conscious of her sex. Women have become class-conscious, as labor has become class-conscious. And the time has passed when we can lock 'em up. At least not all of them.

In short, we would better make the best of it instead of the worst, and trust them as much as they have always had to trust us. That will sound quite shocking and objectionable, I know, to some of my fellow-members of the superior sex. . . . . Well, they ought to know whether or not they have always proved trustworthy.

But, whether we like it or not, the home has changed, and woman has changed, and woman is going out of the home, more than ever before, and she ought to. Three-quarters of woman's traditional domestic activities have gone out of the home and she is going after them. That is why she is in business and the professions. She could hardly help it, if she wanted to, and she doesn't, as a class.

Loafing and Loaves

For centuries and centuries women, in many cases, one who takes a loaf. Having gained leisure, they acquire discontent.

"What most of them want is not to be won, but merely to be wooed, to have the gladness and the glory of knowing that they are attractive to men."

"nice women," hardly dared think, much less talk, about the restraint of marriage imposed upon them with such manifest unfairness. It would not have been "lady-like." They were not supposed even to think about it. It was "unwomanly" to think. Their husbands thought for them and told them all that it was wise for them to know. A noble sex, we give the weaker vessel even her ideals of herself.

Well, they're doing a lot of thinking now and are talking enough to make up for their silence through the previous ages. Nor is all this talk so good. Even the most enthusiastic feminists must admit that. For there is still another class of modern woman, not included in those alluded to above, women who take all the freedom and assume none of the responsibility of the "New" woman, idlers, who because of the domestic changes that have made their sisters get jobs, are allowed to become loafers, although they call themselves "ladies."

"Lady" is an Anglo-Saxon word which formerly meant "the one who gives loaves." Now it seems to mean, in many cases, one who takes a loaf. Having gained leisure, they acquire discontent.

As the Talk Goes Around

This is the class of woman who gives the new freedom a black eye. There are not so many of them as we are inclined to believe, but they are the ones we are apt to see and hear, the ones whom most men violently condemn in public, though they don't seem to mind playing with them in private.

They talk too much, these women, both the young ones and the overgrown flappers. For example:

"The best way to spoil a good sweetheart is to make a husband out of him."

"All men are different, but all husbands are alike."

"I'd certainly be thrilled if some other man were to make love to me as does my husband."

Some other quotations, culled from life, not from literature, which I needn't quote here, are in such rotten taste that I should not blame any husband for yearning to spank a spouse who made such utterances in his presence. But they do not make them in his presence, they make them to other wives' husbands, and more particularly to men who haven't any wives at all.

Talking and Sinning

They do not always make such a hit with talk of this sort as these noisy, would-be-sophisticated wives believe. Women have learned a great deal, but not all of them have yet acquired sportsmanship. The average man to whom such things are said, though they may be prompted by a cocktail and accompanied by a kiss, is inclined to say, though usually he does not, "Well, my dear, if you don't like your marriage get out of it, but if you stay in it play the game."

Once I heard a rather too flapperish-looking married woman rebuked by a gentleman of the old school, who was no longer as young as he used to be, but had endured her "advanced" "modern" patter as long as he could. "Oh, for Heaven's sake," he growled, "go out and sin and then shut up."

But the interesting thing about many of those who do most of the talking is that they do very little of the sinning. It is the quiet ones, who don't say a word of that sort, but merely look on and listen inscrutably, that will bear the closest watching.

A Habit Ages Old

With the other sort, most of their "freedom" is freedom of expression. The best thing to do is to let them get it all nicely talked out of their systems; then with, or without, a dangerous experience or two they are likely to fly home to the cage and slam the door.

For, after all, what most of them want is not to be won, but merely to be wooed, to have the gladness and the glory of knowing that they are attractive to men. Well, how can you blame them? It is the immemorial habit of the sex.

No doubt, as feminists claim, they are worthy and capable of higher things. I, for one, am perfectly willing to believe it when they tell me so. But here again we must look deeper and farther back into the history of the species. And what do we see

From time out of mind, and even up to the present day, for many women, the only chance the female had for life, for love, even for subsistence, was the favor of the male. The habits of biology cannot be broken up by the economic and social conditions of an infinitesimally small period of time.

This article is written in a university town where there are ten or twelve thousand students, perhaps a quarter of whom are members of the more dangerous, at any rate more delightful sex. They study philosophy and chemistry, and Greek and Latin, and God knows what else. But I have observed that "Beauty shoppes" outnumber the plain book shops by at least ten to one.

I do not write that in disparagement of the co-eds. If the beauty shop is what makes them so charming, go to it, I say. But it is interesting and significant all the same that in this seat of learning where women have the opportunity of "improving their minds" and of proving their equality to man that they do not neglect to improve their looks, which are already far superior to those of the men.

Of course woman wants to be attractive to man, despite the dire forebodings of those men who predicted in turn that education, the vote, and economic independence would "unsex" her. Woman always has wanted to be attractive to man and always will. Was there ever a woman who wouldn't much prefer beauty to brains? I do not know. But I do know some who have both.

Have Measles Early

But, you see, while she can convince herself that she has brains by passing better examinations than the boys, how can she be convinced that she has beauty unless she passes the examination of the boys?

And having formed the habit of being attractive to men in her youth, and having studied the art of pleasing, the only art we used to approve of her pursuing, having perfected this most important art while (more or less) young, must a woman, merely because she is married, abandon the oldest and most interesting art in the world?

Well, maybe she ought to, but she doesn't. Not yet, and she never will. So, it is no wonder that, woman being what she is, marriage being what it is, with the false ideals of literature, the new freedom from repressions, the old habit of attraction and the constant prosaicness of domestic life—it is no wonder, I say, that an attack of Matrimonial Measles is likely to come, soon or late, in almost every matrimonial career.

But if you must have the measles, have them early and get them over with. Children's diseases are not becoming to middle-aged people.

The Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

Pruning Clematis

THERE is apt to be a good deal of misunderstanding as to how best to treat clematis after it has done flowering, particularly by those who are growing it for the first time.

The clematis may be grouped under a number of sections, but for practical purposes they may be placed in two categories: The early flowering kinds which bloom in the Spring and the late varieties which bear their flowers in the Summer and Fall.

The variety which is mostly grown for Spring effect is Montana which very soon fills a large space and in May is covered with hundreds of white starry flowers. There is a variety rubra with pink flowers, which is no less effective. These should be pruned just after they have completely gone out of flower. If a covering mass is desired it will not be necessary to prune in the ordinary acceptance of the term. All that will be necessary will be to remove weak or straggling growths that serve no useful purpose, exhausted wood and twiggy growth.

Useful specimens of Clematis Montana may be obtained by allowing the main stems to find their way over the whole surface of the object to be covered, and then having the shoots that have borne flowers removed each year to allow room for the new shoots that come in abundance all over the main stem.

Later Varieties

The Summer and Fall-flowering clematis of the Lanuginosae and Jackmanni types should be treated in a different manner. The Lanuginosae type requires all the old wood and any weak growths to be entirely removed and the new shoots tied into place. This should be done in late Winter, say February, and in no case before that.

The Jackmanni Clematis should be cut down to within a foot of the ground each year. Here again, however, the procedure depends upon the area to be covered. It will be found that hard pruning will induce most vigorous growth and prolific flowering; therefore, as the bare stems are no particular ornament during the season they are out of flower, it is just as well to prune hard and secure vigorous growth which will probably cover the desired amount of space.

While the manner and extent of pruning may well be left to the tastes of the grower, in order to suit the circumstances, no clematis, except the Spring-flowering kind, should be pruned until late Winter or early Spring.

The Lawn

There are two best months in the year for sowing grass seed for lawns: April and September. Sometimes there is good reason for sowing in the Spring and sometimes the September sowing is more advantageous. It is better to sow on well prepared ground in September than on a poorly prepared site in the Spring.

If the soil is fairly clean—that is, free from long roots of coarse weeds, it is not an advantage to dig up the ground deeply. Surface preparation only is needed, provided the surface is level; it may be undulating, but it must not be irregular on the surface.

Soil containing the roots of coarse weeds must be deeply dug, the roots of the weeds extracted whole, as far as possible, and big stones and foreign matter removed. It does not matter if the ground is rather wet while the digging is being done so long as it is dry when the final leveling is being attended to.

Violas

Some plants do bloom themselves to death and violas are among them. If one wants to get the very best out of viola plants one must give them almost daily attention. All faded blooms must be removed and no seed pods must be allowed to form. It pays during very hot weather to remove every flower and bud and thus give the plants a rest for a week or two. They will respond with gratitude to this treatment and flower the better for it. Viola beds should be well watered at night and a mulch of leaf mould or spent manure will be a great help and will prolong the season of bloom.

Cutting Back Perennials

Old plants of Delphiniums and other perennials are often cut back after their first flowering with the idea of keeping the border tidy. Cutting back plants that have had their first harvest of flowers should be done with a view to a second crop, as well as in the interest of a tidy border. The second batch of flowers is very often composed of neat, highly-colored and refined blooms. They are splendid for cutting for house decoration and they prevent a blank in the border. Do not cut the main stem right down to the ground, but leave it a few inches high, as this will be found to induce the new growth that will give the second crop. In some seasons it will be found that this second crop will be almost equal to the first, just as in a hot dry season the September show of roses is generally better than the June crop. It is a good thing when cutting back perennials with a view to a second crop, to remove some of the soil around the plants and to introduce some leaf mould or well rotted manure. It will be found that this treatment will bring results in the matter of more flowers.

German Government Cares for 679,410 World War Casualties

There are 679,410 casualties of the World War wholly dependent upon the Federal Government for support. They are so badly maimed or diseased that their earning capacity, when any, is less than twenty-five per cent of normal. Included in the total are 1,150 women, chiefly former Red Cross nurses. The War Ministry, which publishes the statistics, calls attention to the fact that sixty-five per cent of the incapacitated were more than thirty years old when they entered the service. Nearly twenty per cent are now over fifty. In the province of Hessen-Nassau the war casuals total 2.2 per cent of the entire population, and in Bavaria 1.4 per cent.

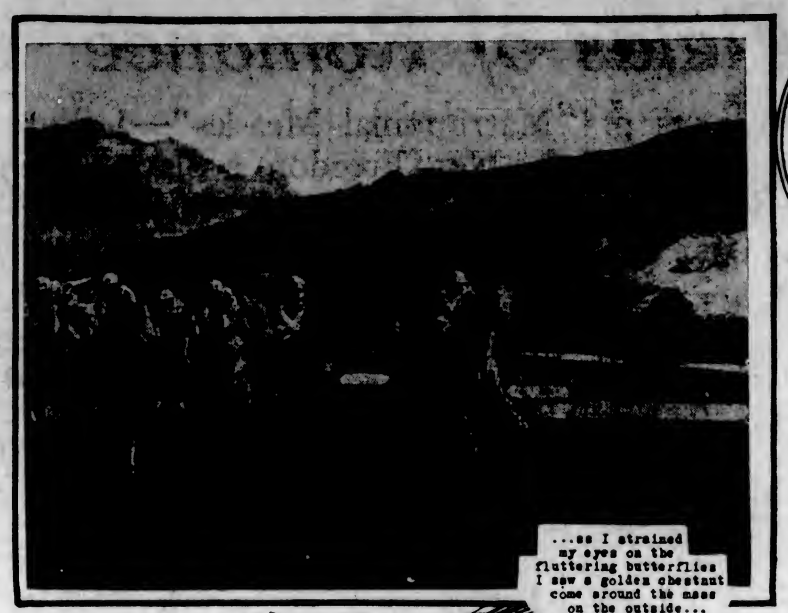
WHAT MAKES A HORSE GREAT?

By W. A. FRASER



...as I strained my eyes on the fluttering butterflies I saw a golden chestnut come around the mass on the outside...

The subtle something that makes him greater than all others cannot be weighed or measured or seen.

ONE day last Summer, meeting an owner whom I knew on the club lawn at a famous Canadian race track, I asked, "What do you know about the temperament of horses, Sam?"

This seemed a poser. He stiffened up as though suddenly called upon to make a public speech. "Guess I don't know anything," he answered.

Having drawn a blank, to relieve the tension. I asked casually, "Running anything today?"

Now I got the invariable answer, the answer that anybody will get from almost any trainer, a pessimistic, disparaging testimonial to the horse the man is starting. I suppose it is human nature to hide under a bushel the light of a betting proposition.

"I'm starting The Sculptor," my friend said, "but he's a bad actor—he sticks his toes in the ground and sulks. In the stable he bullies everybody, but when he gets in a race he curls up—he's a cur!"

"Saul," I said, "perhaps he has just got notions—"

"By gosh! he's got notions right enough," Saul ejaculated.

"And, fights with the jockey," I continued. "You say he can run; tell your jockey to let him have his head—not touch him with whip nor heel—just let him run loose—don't even take a pull at him. Let the boy sit the saddle, and if he likes croon some kind of a song."

Saul laughed, and passed on to the paddock.

That was before the first race, and by the time The Sculptor's race, the fifth, had come around, I had forgotten all about him. But The Sculptor won, going away, running over the top of his horses at odds of 20 to 1.

I felt rather cheap; I had been taken in by my dear friend Saul—so had the public. Later, meeting Saul, I said, intending to be sarcastic; "Your horse improved remarkably and quickly."

A Dud Sarcasm

My shell loaded with sarcasm fell a dud. Instead of looking abashed Saul smiled, put a hand on my arm and said, "I tried a new racket on The Sculptor—put one over on him. I told the boy to give him his head, not to interfere with him at all, and kid the horse into thinking that we hadn't a penny on him."

"Just what I told you to do, eh?"

Then he stared aghast—he had forgotten it was I who had told him this; but he limped out of it by saying, "Oh, I told the boy that this morning."

Many famous horses have been possessed of a devilish temper, and when not vicious, perhaps so nervous that the trainer has been in hot water all the time. How often have I had a trainer say to me, "If my horse will give his running he ought to win, but he's a sulky brute."

Peter, an English horse, had a marvelous flight of speed, but he was a demon, a black demon. With him it was pure temper, not faintheartedness; he would scream like an angered leopard in his rage at times. But in his races, when he would run, he was as vehement as he was in his tantrums. In 1881, running in the Royal Hunt Cup at Ascot, he pulled up, just after the start, to kick, to lash out viciously with both hind hoofs; but by some soothing necromancy Fred Archer got him going again, and though the other horses were all away in front he beat them home, running over the top of them. It was a marvelous gallop, for Peter had 129 pounds up, and the Hunt Cup distance is seventy-four yards short of a mile.

Surefoot was one big embodied question mark. What he could do was known, but what he would do was not. Sometimes he would run a grand race when ridden by a certain boy in Mr. Merry's stable, but when he was in an evil mood not even this rider could get anything out of him.

Surefoot was by Wisdom, rather a chance bred horse, but he probably inherited his temperamental nature from his dam, who was a daughter of Galopin, this famous line that runs through St. Simon being extremely nervous, and in some cases vicious.

A Hot Favorite

Surefoot was one of the best as a two-year-old, and began as a three-year-old by winning the "Two Thousand," so he was made a hot favorite for the Derby. But in the race he began to savage the other horses as they rounded Tattenham Corner, and finished fourth.

I saw Surefoot win the Eclipse Stakes at Sandown Park, a £10,000 stake, a year or so later, and the boy they had discovered Surefoot liked was in the saddle. The horse was 10 to 1 in the betting, the 10 to 1 laid against his mentality, not his legs. Common, the winner of the Derby, was an odds-on favorite.

Sandown course is like a horseshoe, the horses starting for the mile and a quarter of the Eclipse Stakes at a point across from the stand and running to the right along the far leg of the horseshoe around one bend that lay in a hollow, and finishing up hill on the other leg of the horseshoe.

Surefoot was in mood of exhilarated tempestuousness in the paddock; he was like a magnificent lion, like some fabled centaur, his chestnut coat gleaming like burnished gold shot with splashed copper-colored wine in the sun. There could not be a physical exhibit of breeding development of greater beauty in all the equine world, and yet men had only evil words for the magnificent creature, sneers; they called him a coward, the horse with the yellow streak; 10 to 1 epitomized the consensus of opinion; and this flaw, just the little ball of grey matter in the skull beneath the tapering ears that lay flat against his neck in anger, the machine all so beautifully perfect except the mental force, and that all awry.

The breeders of Surefoot, the owner, the trainer, the jockey, all helpless, governed, mastered by the inherited vagary of the few ounces of brain matter that Surefoot possessed. It was a striking example of what owners and trainers are up against always and forever; a standful of people may turn their thumbs down against the owner of some horse, saying that he has cheated, had his horse pulled, when perhaps that owner has been all but ruined by the sulky mood of his horse.

A Golden Brain Wave

Then the horses went from the paddock along the course to the starting point of the Eclipse Stakes; then they were off. As they flashed into wiew, looking like a sudden streaming of blue and gold and green-winged butterflies, I saw the silk jacket of the boy on Surefoot fluttering in the sunlight ten lengths behind everything in the race; one could almost feel the stab of those reluctant hoofs into the green sod as Surefoot galloped with short, proppy stride; his ears were pinned back, and his tail switched irritably. In the saddle a little lad sat with the patience of a sleeping dog—not the slightest move made he; perhaps he was crooning some stable chatter to the golden-coated giant under him.

Down the far hill to the lower turn they galloped, Surefoot waiting more for a fight with his jockey than a combat with the other horses. Around the lower turn the green and gold and crimson and blue and purple twisted in and out like the colored glass of a kaleidoscope, the colors of Mr. Merry on Surefoot showing so far behind that the raucous voice of a bookmaker rose above the tumult bellowing, "I'll lay 20 to 1 against Surefoot!"

Coming up the hill of the home stretch alignment blotted out placement. There were shouts from the burly betting men of the ring that this one would win or that one had got it; and then, as I strained my eyes on the fluttering butterflies, I saw a golden chestnut come around the mass on the outside, and galloping as if he raced with mules, Surefoot, his boy still as motionless as if he slept, swept on with his mighty stride, to win by six or eight lengths.

Just a little something, a mood of sunshine flitting across the tiny grey field of his skull.

Steve Donoghue a Student

Steve Donoghue, the English jockey, is evidently a great student of the mentality of the horses he rides; perhaps that is one of the reasons of his great success.

In speaking of the Tetrarch he say that in the Woodcote Stake at Epsom he was a little concerned as to how his mount would come around Tattenham Corner, for the Tetrarch, a two-year-old, had never been trained or raced around a turn up to that time. But the big grey Tetrarch, who, with his extraordinary stride soon ran around his field, and cutting in to the rail shaved it around the treacherous corner, as Steve says, "As though he had raced there all his life—he certainly had done it all before in a previous existence."

The Tetrarch, according to Steve, had a wonderful mental equipment, along with his gigantic frame and world of speed. He had an intuitive knowledge of what the starting gate meant. In his first race his trainer was anxious because the colt had been but once through the starting gate in his training. But according to Donoghue: "In the race the grey colt watched the tapes go up, and as they rose he flew beneath them and away, to win, pulling up, by four lengths."

The Tetrarch invariably beat the barrier, and he had his own ideas of how he ought to run his race to win, which was to get off in front and stay there. Now his owner wanted to find out if he would run a waiting race, come from behind and win, for that was the English idea of winning distance races. So a trial was arranged with a three-year-old, Glencairn, and Donoghue restrained the grey colt, rating him alongside Glencairn. Tetrarch resented this and sulked—when Donoghue called on him to go on and beat the other horse he simply wouldn't give his best running. The owner declared that Tetrarch had gone off, was losing his form; but Donoghue declared that it was simply because of his interference with the horse's desire. So a few days later the Tetrarch was tried over six furlongs with Glencairn and three other older horses, and this time the grey was allowed to jump off in front, and beat the others a hundred yards.

Horse Did Own Thinking

There the horse was, the same wonderful flight of speed, the same jockey, beaten by Glencairn when the horse's brain was ignored, and again, with the same physical outfit and allowed to do his own thinking, beating the same horse and others a hundred yards.

The methods of jockeys are as divergent as the habits of their mounts. Take the case of Fred Archer; he was the greatest jockey ever known in England, but at a terrible price. Many of the two-year-olds he rode were good for nothing after their races, ruined by Archer's whip and spur—his terrible severity. It mattered little to him, apparently, what became of the horse after the race—he was riding for a reputation. He had a wonderful insight into the minds of horses, but first of all with him came first past the post.

Different was the method of two of his rivals, George Fordham and Tom Cannon. It was Tom Cannon who declared that he would as soon hit a child as a two-year-old that was doing his best.

Fordham rode for Baron Rothschild, and the baron, while a wonderful philanthropic gentleman and kind-hearted, was insatiable to his desire to win—he wouldn't nurse his two-year-olds and bring them out for a coup. One day he said to Fordham when he was starting a two-year-old for the first time: "I want you to make aure of winning on this one, Fordham, for we have all backed him heavily." And Fordham replied: "My lord, why not give a good two-year-old an easy race his first time out till he knows what it's all about? When I ride a green two-year-old to the post and feel his heart beating against his ribs beneath my legs I feel sorry for him—haven't got the heart to knock him about, for he's only a baby."

Successful Gentle Methods

It is said that Tom Cannon and George Fordham got more out of horses, especially two-year-olds, with their gentle methods than did any other jockey with whip and spur. I wonder if the time will come when a jockey will not be allowed to carry a whip. I know racing men who will not allow a rider to lay a whip on a horse. It ought to be universal. It might be claimed that certain horses are of so sluggish a temperament that they will not give forth their best efforts except under the lash; but why race such horses, for the claim is made that racing is solely for the improvement of the breed, and one of the great requisites of the improvement is high spirit and high courage.

If one wishes to acquire a distaste for racing let him go and lean over the rail just at the starting gate, and watch the frenzy in the faces of the horses and the ferocity in the eyes of the jockeys. A few of the beautiful thoroughbreds are possessed of the lust of strife, but most of them are in a panic of fear, are crazed with dread. Up in the stand men and women will be saying: "Look at that crazy horse—he's been doped!" He has; he is doped with fear of the lash. "Ugly brute!" will be all the sympathy expressed for him.

I have seen an assistant starter, while hanging on to a horse's bridle, strike him again and again with his fist or his elbow, and less than a month from that time I've seen that same horse stand perfectly quiet at the gate of another track, no abuse needed, no blows. And behind these horses lined up at the barrier, perhaps all baby two-year-olds, ther will be an assistant starter with a big bull-whip. There are the babies, a mechanical contrivance in front holding them in, and behind them the bull-whip, and when the barrier shoots up to the clang of the gong, whips cut at the flanks of the half-crazed thoroughbreds, the jocks striving for the lead on the soup-plate track; some of these soup-plates but half a mile around, so the lead against the rail means many pounds in that horse's favor.

A Mild Reminder Needed

There will be some excuse for a mild reminder from a whip in the last few lengths of a race—it might rouse the horse and do not great harm—but take away the Princes' horse.

I know racing men who will not allow a rider to lay a whip on a horse. It should be universal.

whip, and if racing can't do without it do away with racing, for, as I have described, it is not a demonstration of higher development. Perhaps somehow there is a link between the whip and the predominant use of the "rogues' badge," the "blinkers," in America.

It is certain that, take a nervous line of horses like the Galopin-Galliard-St. Simon, the whip may utterly ruin a two-year-old. Galliard, who was in a terrible state of excitement in the "Two Thousand," which he won, was beaten in the Derby by St. Blaise and Highland Chief, though later he proved he was a much better horse. This was due to the wasting effect of his mental turmoil, and, being ridden by Fred Archer, who was a punisher, matters were probably made worse for him.

His son, St. Simon, was equally temperamental, though good enough to divide honors with the great Ormond as the horse of the century.

Rather curious with what persistency the mental strain carries on, and this heredity is a fantastic thing, unexplainable; there is no possibility of hereditary transmission of acquired knowledge through education; what goes from sire to offspring must be in a germ cell—a something, not the indiscernible, floaty nebulosity called courage or temper. Until scientists can know and describe life as a concrete something, we must remain in ignorance of what vehicle conveys the spiritual incitement to action, either obedience or revolt.

And where did this heredity of extreme excitability that is so dominant in the Galopin come from? Not from the Arab ancestors—for they are the sweetest mannered horses on earth; and there was no dam family in England consistent enough, or prevailing enough, to supply anything beyond a larger physical development, for the English females that were crossed with the Arabs were of all sorts—Spanish or otherwise.

Transmissible Mental Traits

A casual disturbed mentality in a single horse would be nothing to wonder at, but a continuous, transmissible mental government is not a haphazard incident, it is just what it is, a marvelous governing force, the mightiest thing in breeding, man or horse, and the least possible of analysis. But how it works out.

A son of St. Simon, Diamond Jubilee, won the Two Thousand and the Derby, beating, among others, James R. Keene's Disguise II. I remember that race, and how Diamond Jubilee galloped home, a good horse—because I rode down to Epsom with Mr. Keene.

Later, in the Jockey Club Stakes, a mile and a quarter, at Newmarket, temperament twisted that form all about. Already Diamond Jubilee had developed the Galopin nervouaness that sometimes, and particularly in his case, took the form of vicious temper. And like many an intellectual equine this brainy son of St. Simon had begun to discriminate as to the men about him—he had his likes and dislikes. Neither Jack Watts nor Morny Cannon could approach him in the paddock—their presence threw him into a passion—he became a raging demon; but the trainer, Marsh, had discovered that Diamond Jubilee had become attached to H. Jones, the stable boy, who exercised him. It was another case similar to that of Surefoot and his boy.

The horse was owned by the Prince of Wales, so perhaps because of the illustrious one Jones was given a licence on rather short order, and the boy rode the

In the Jockey Club Stakes Diamond Jubilee was made favorite; but wise heads wagged when their owners saw the vicious mood he was in in the paddock before the race, so his odds traveled out till he was 7 to 4 against. When the horses passed from the Birdcage to the track Diamond Jubilee would not budge. A stable mate, Frontignan, who was always in attendance on Diamond Jubilee as a soothing companion, was led out to the track, but even then the fractious one refused to follow.

Try Flim-Flam Methods

Somebody thought of a plan to defeat Jubilee's objection to a race that day, for no doubt the horse knew what was coming and didn't want it; another gate was opened, and Diamond Jubilee, thinking he was being excused from combat, passed out of the track.

"You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink," and you can lead a thoroughbred to the post, but you can't make him gallop if he doesn't want to. And Diamond Jubilee didn't want to—he ran sixth, Disguise II winning the £10,000 stake.

The American horse Ornament, a winner of many races—the Brooklyn Handicap and others—was in such a vile mood for the Suburban Handicap that he delayed the start one hour and in the race was unplaced.

Banaster lost the Suburban in 1901, his bad temper causing him to be left at the post.

Ben Brush, by Bramble, a remarkable horse, was beaten by a very ordinary horse, Havoc, in the Oriental Handicap, in 1897, owing to his moods. The owner of Havoc, Mr. Boyle, told me this Summer a curious thing about that race.

Boyle believed Havoc would win it, and he bet all the money he had in the world. Havoc was about 100 to 1 in the betting. The jockey Boyle had engaged couldn't make the weight, so another boy was secured from a friend at the last minute. In the race the horses got away pretty well in a bunch, and Boyle thought he saw his brown horse going strong. As they made the lower turn there was a jumble, and a couple of horses went down. Boyle felt his heart sink, for his luck had been so bad that one of the fallen ones would certainly prove to be Havoc. It surely was, for, gaze as he might through his glasses, he couldn't pick out his colors. The horses strung out coming up the stretch were all flagging colors atop not one of them his.

And as they passed the post something beating Ben Brush a head. Boyle's colors were not seen. Broke! Cleaned out by an accident, a devilish accident, he thought; nothing but a spill could have kept Havoc out of the money, and he had backed him across the board.

"Havoc" Wins!

Then the numbers were dropped into place, and the number above Ben Brush's, the winner's, was his—Havoc's number.

Great Scott! But a mistake!. It must be some terrible jumble, for the jockey sitting on the horse that carried the winner's number wore a gold-and-crimson splashed jacket, while Boyle's was blue.

Boyle was a big, healthy, good-natured chap, with oceans of friends, many of whom had known of his wild gamble, and they pressed about him, and shook his hand, and patted him on the back. And the man in whose stable was the jockey who had ridden Havoc was saying: "There was a mix-up in the colors, Boyle; my jockey, when he was told to weigh out, thought he was going to ride something of mine, so kept my colors on."

The ideal of most racing men is a horse with not too much daylight under him, length up to a great stride, powerful quarters, and so forth. St. Simon was ridiculously short, high on his legs, and possessed of very slight, weak-looking hindquarters.

And St. Simon's grandsire, Galopin, was by Vedette, who, though he won the Two Thousand Guineas, was so unimpressive that he was sold for forty-two guineas; and perhaps that was a fair price for the physical exhibit. But the wonder courage—spirit, call it plasmogen or what you will—that passed in that trade was worth a million pounds or more.

Teddington, 1848, had everything—speed, bottom, weight-carrying power. He won the Derby, Doncaster Cup, Ascot Gold Cup, beating the great Stockwell; yet Teddington was small, short, straight in the shoulder, had upright pasterns, and small feet; he was calf-kneed.

Newminster, the sire of Hermit, was a very small horse, always delicate, never fit, yet he won the St. Leger.

Ormonde's History

The history of Ormonde's great-grandsire, The Cure, is odd. He was a little runt of a horse, and drifted up to Scotland. They tried to make a jumper of him, but, as his owner said, he wouldn't jump over a broomstick without falling. Dr. Murray gave Mr. Jones three half-crowns for The Cure when the latter had got tired of him. The Cure was lame on a foreleg, and Dr. Murray cured this; but, as he says, the horse was so lazy that he was sick of him.

Before leaving England The Cure had sired a horse, Lambton, and this one won some races, so Dr. Murray was able to sell The Cure for £50. He quaintly remarked: "When I had The Cure he was fifteen hands high; in the advertisements I read of him now he is fifteen-three."

He also bought The Cure's son, Lambton, but he considered the latter no good after he tried him in some races, and gave him away to go back to England. The Cure then became the founder of a great line; he was the sire of 180 winners, who won three hundred races between 1856 and 1867. He became the great-grandsire of the mighty Ormonde on the maternal side, for The Cure was the sire of Polly Agnes, who was the dam of Lilly Agnes, who foaled Ormonde.

The Cure's son, Lambton, became one of the crack sires of England after his return from Scotland.

What a lottery this breeding of thoroughbreds—what a romance; as uncertain as gold mining. "Gold is where you find it," is an adage of the prospector; and a great horse is when he is born great. Take some of this neglect of horses that afterwards proved great in America. In America Vandal was neglected for twelve years as a sire, but in 1869 he sired three good ones. Then he was taken into the Belle Meade stud, and there begot Virgil, and Virgil begot Hindoo, the sire of Hanover, and Hanover sired Hamburg. Thus from the outcast, the ugly duckling, came one of America's famous lines of thoroughbreds.

Others in Romance

Vandal did not monopolize all the romance either, for his son, Virgil, was thrust into the discard. He was a beautiful black, but only moderate as a racing machine. At seven he was drawing a buggy, and afterwards a wagon. But he was sent to Kentucky, where a Mr. Sanford used him as a makeshift, mating him with two or three mares, then gave him away. But from the chance matings at the Preakness Farm two or three good colts were born, and Sanford bought back Virgil and then he became the sire of the great Hindoo.

Bonnie Scotland, who had won classic races in England—the St. Leger and others—was imported to New York, and finally sold for $1,200, the price of a cheap selling-plater; then for fifteen years he was bandied about, but finally landed in the Belle Meade stud, with no reputation to speak of, but soon from his loins came Bramble and Luke Blackburn, the line that includes Ben Brush, Broomstick, Cudgel—one of the great American lines of breeding.

Now, these citations of the handicraft of King Chance as against the deductions of horse breeders brings us back to the conviction that the excellence, the superior speed and courage of the thoroughbred is as much a matter of mind as of muscle. So many of the present-day great lines have been carried on, almost originated by horses that, because of a seemingly inconsistent physical development, were neglected as sires.

And on the other side of the ledger is a great column of names of wondrous race-horses that were complete failures as sires. Gladiateur, who was one of the greatest winners of classics of all times, perhaps the only horse that ever won the triple crown of England—the Two Thousand, the Derby, and the St. Leger and the Grand Prix de Paris, left little behind him, and his line is practically extinct. He must have had the something, the motor of conquest, but he wouldn't pass it on.

Ormonde, the horse of the century, in addition to his magnificent frame, must have had that something, but he was practically impotent. One son, Orme, gave great promise, but the line has dwindled.

The subject is an enthralling study, enthralling but almost impossible of solution. The frame of the thoroughbred can be appraised, his speed checked off by the stop-watch, his stamina tested with weight and distance, but the subtle something that makes him greater than all others cannot be weighed or measured, or seen, or forecast as to whether it can be transmitted or not.

Japan's Blind Masseurs

Massage—rubbing the skin and kneading the muscles—has been one of the most important items in Japanese medical practice for centuries, as it is today. The two other important methods of treatment are acupuncture (piercing with a needle) and the "moxa," or skin-burning process. In town streets when night comes can be heard the melancholy note of a flute and the shuffle of wooden "geta." It is the "Amma," or blind shampooer, wandering through the town and announcing his coming. Those shampooers and masseurs form a guild of their own in Japan and the practice has been confined to the blind by immemorial custom.

New Brunswick Is Canada's Woodland Province

Traditions Founded Upon Loyalist Settlement When Allegiance Was at Stake—Elder Sister of the Provinces Founded When Twelve Thousand Crossed to Canada to Live Under British Flag—First Map Was Drawn by Champlain

By BLODWEN DAVIES

NEW BRUNSWICK, the woodland Province of the Dominion, is one of the older sisters of Confederation. She is able to regard youthful things of the West with a certain amount of sisterly superiority and the natural family concern for the gay children who appropriate more than their share of attention because of their irrepressible youth and ambition. New Brunswick, to whom fell a share of the responsibility in the early days of Canadian housekeeping, is now a very mature sort of householder, having gathered in a big share of this world's wealth and having provided herself with all sorts of dignities in the way of education and legislation. She is properly accorded her full quota of authority in the direction of national affairs and provides a steadying voice in the direction of national policies.

Visited by Cabot

She can lay claim to date back to the remotest annals of recorded history in America, for John Cabot, having found and named Newfoundland, cruised along the beautiful and magnificent shores of New Brunswick before setting off for home to receive the ten pounds reward provided by a not overly extravagant monarch for having discovered a new world. Cartier and Champlain have implanted their names upon the soil of New Brunswick, and the great Father of New France himself drew the first map that was made of the Province's coastline.

New Brunswick is truly a Maritime Province, having a coastline of more than six hundred miles, enclosing an area two-thirds as big as Great Britain.

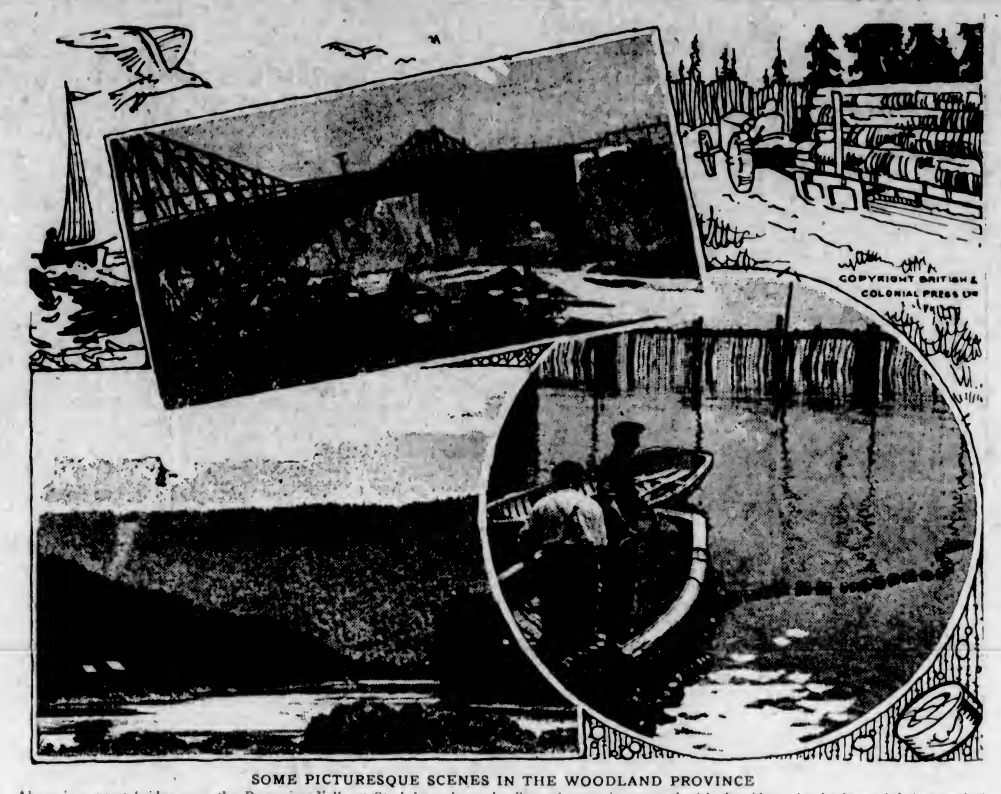
In spite of the fact that men have been at work since the seventeenth century cutting down the timber of the Province and that great and devastating fires have laid waste vast stretches of the land, New Brunswick is still, generally speaking, the forest primeval. It is the paradise of hunters and sportsmen and of those who love the green carpeted aisles of the woods, to whom the music of the wind in the trees brings infinite delight and soul solace and to whom the merry waters dancing and glancing over the rocks is art enough. It is the haunt of the woodland creatures, the kin of those magnificent beasts whose eyes were first to scan with alarm the tawny sails of the explorer's ships.

A Game Country

New Brunswick is enormously proud of the fine moose and caribou that fall to its huntsmen and to those from various lands who come to her forests seeking game. Moose have been shot there with as many as twenty-nine points to their antlers and with a spread of nearly seven feet.

Men who have been bred with a knowledge of these wild things of the forest have now turned their knowledge to account in the management of fur farms. There are nearly a hundred of these fur farms in the Province where animals are bred for their rare and costly skins. The animals are worth more than a million dollars to their owners today.

It was the fur trade that was the lodestone of the earliest pioneers who settled in New Brunswick, for fur was the readiest wealth that fell to the hardy hunter and trapper in the great and untouched forests. The Indian tribes that roamed the land were soon paying the tribute of their arrows to the trading posts of the French, who took these forest crops back to their homeland to deck their lords and ladies.



SOME PICTURESQUE SCENES IN THE WOODLAND PROVINCE

A Timber Province

But the lumber trade brings to New Brunswick her greatest wealth today. There is a charm in the very names of the woods that bring wealth to her people, spruce, fir, pine, cedar, birch, beech and maple. Lumber camps and factories exist upon the natural wealth of her forests. Two hundred and fifty-five sawmills and numerous paper and pulp mills and factories converting timber into market products employ vast numbers of the people. The forest yields at least sixteen million dollars worth of products every year, whole pulp and paper products total nearly eight million dollars. There are in addition nine hundred factories busy in New Brunswick, many of them converting forest products into goods for the market.

One of the most romantic of the group of fascinating characters who first appear upon the stage of history in the Atlantic Province is Nicholas Denys, who found time in his busy pioneering life to write a record of what was going on around him, and who, in spite of hardship and struggle, lived to be ninety years of age. Denys established his trading post not far from the city of Bathurst of today. He realized the wealth in the rich fishing waters along the coast and established fishing settlements far and wide. From that day to this New Brunswick has been a Province of fishermen, the cold Atlantic waters bringing within reach of her hardy men who go down to the sea in ships, the finest edible fish known, salmon, cod, haddock, herring, sardines, smelts, to say little of lobster and oysters, and various other varieties.

The harvest of the sea is garnered by men with whom the traditions of the Atlantic are strong, and inland there is another type of fisherman, who, in the lakes and swift rivers of the Province gather in finny tribute for the dining tables of the Dominion. There is a musical romance in the names of some of these great rivers, the Metapedia, the Restigouche, the Miramichi and the Nipisguit, that ripple and dash and flow through the heavily wooded country which has been providing lumber and timber for Europe since early in the seventeenth century.

As the timber is cut from the vast stretches of rich forest lands, New Brunswick is gradually adding to her agricultural lands. These lands must be uncovered and brought to light by the axe of the lumberman and then they yield their quota of wealth to this prosperous elder sister of the Provinces. Of the twenty million acres of territory New Brunswick has almost four and a half million acres of farm land and nearly forty thousand farms. There are twenty cheese factories at work turning out products that rival and excel the famous products of Denmark. These farms have half a million head of live stock and a million poultry.

Picturesque Cities

But her cities, too, offer infinite variety to those seeking for the picturesque. From St. John set off ships that sail the seven seas and along her waterfront sailormen stroll and exchange adventures and spin yarns of experiences that befell them, all the way from Australia to Norway and from Cape of Good Hope to Canton.

"It is a city of quality. It has a vivid air of attractiveness and prosperity. It is history and romance rounded off with the grain elevator," said a keen-eyed Englishman who was sent across with the Prince of Wales to collect impressions of that first great tour for newspaper readers in Great Britain. It is the oldest chartered city in Canada.

St. John has one curious feature that is duplicated nowhere else in this universe. It is a reversing fall. When the tide is low the St. John River falls over a ledge toward the sea, but when the great tides of the Bay of Fundy sweep in, and the salt water rushes into the river, the accommodating falls turn themselves round and flow into the St. John River.

Fredericton, the capital, has a charm all its own. Quaint, old-fashioned, stately, conscious of its dignity as the headquarters of legislation, almost buried beneath the wealth of its verdure, Fredericton preserves the atmosphere of the days when railways and motor cars were still only dreams in the inventor's minds.

The Arrival of the Loyalists

The most picturesque episode in New Brunswick's hall of memories is the arrival of more than twelve thousand men, women and children from the rebel States to the south, when men were forced to declare for or against the Mother Country. For their loyalty's sake these brave folks abandoned homes and property and moved northward to claim the privilege of working out their destiny under the British flag. This wholesale immigration of United Empire Loyalists increased the population of that territory from one thousand to thirteen thousand with consequent founding of the cities of St. John and Fredericton and the expansion of trade and agriculture.

So New Brunswick set out upon her way with the finest tradition behind her. In spite of all the struggles and hardships of the early settlers, of conflicts that raged back and forth over her land, of naval battles that were fought about her coasts, wars between Indians and French, then between the French and the English, and at length, alas, between English and English, she emerged with ideals intact, with great traditions behind her and a noble future ahead of her.

New Brunswick has achieved her honored place in the world of affairs today with the help of only four hundred thousand of a population, or less than five per cent of the population of the Dominion. She has been the source from which the Western Provinces have drawn scores of their finest pioneers and educators and law makers. She has indeed been the affectionate older sister, drawing upon her funds of experience to help out the younger members of the family in setting up their housekeeping.

Astronomers Picture Celestial Explosion; Moon Intervenes

By W. J. LUYTEN
Of the Harvard Observatory, in N.Y. Times

WHEN we read in the news columns that a new star of thirteenth magnitude has been discovered in a spiral nebula, how little do we realize the significance of such an event? If, after witnessing an earthquake, a bad thunderstorm, a tornado or a display of northern lights, we think that we have caught a glimpse of what nature can achieve when she is outdoing herself for our benefit, we may consider ourselves fortunate that we have never been a close witness to the outburst of a new star.

Here we have a real display of the forces of nature, an explosion we cannot remotely imitate or even imagine on earth, an explosion which in a few hours or days may transform an object of comparative insignificance into one of absolute, though ephemeral, supremacy in the universe.

Sometimes the new star is fairly close to us, and it appears to us as the brightest star in the sky; sometimes the star dwells in another universe, a distant island universe, and the outburst seems restrained, screened off by the enormous distance. This was true of the new star that recently flashed up in the spiral nebula Messier No. 61, in the constellation Virgo.

Discovered in May

It was discovered on May 13 by Professor Max Wolf and K. Reinmuth in Heidelberg, Germany. It was then of the thirteenth magnitude; that is, about a thousand times too faint to be seen by the naked eye. It would have been difficult to see even in the largest telescope at our disposal, but the sensitive photographic plate showed it easily.

The news of the discovery was immediately telegraphed to Copenhagen, the central bureau for astronomical telegrams in Europe. From there it was cabled to the Harvard Observatory, the astronomical clearing house for news on this continent. Harvard relayed the discovery to the different observatories in America, and by the time night came on May 15 all the observatories of the world were ready to attack the new arrival. Cloudy weather interfered, and it was not until May 18 that the Harvard Observatory got a chance at it. A photograph exposed for half an hour gave a good impression of the spiral nebula, and the new star was plainly shown; it was then between the fourteenth and fifteenth magnitude.

Nature's Greatest Drama

Two days later the moon began to interfere, and for the present all observations of the nova are out of the question; the strong moonlight would only fog the plates. Astronomers are eagerly waiting the time when the moon will have got out of the way and they can get more information about the new star.

Will it still be visible? Perhaps it is brighter now, or perhaps it is fainter. Possibly it has slipped away altogether, very quietly, under protection of the moonlight, and we may never see it again; another victim for the morgue.

In the meantime, what do we know about novae? What happens and how? We still grope in the dark, and we can only surmise how the phenomenon of a new star is brought about. How is the stage set for this, nature's greatest drama? We do not know. It is done inside the star in all probability, and in the eternal silence of empty space.

Celestial T.N.T.

Slowly but surely the celestial T.N.T. is stored up and put together, and all is made safe for the onlookers. No advertising is done, so far as we know, and there is only one performance, with possibly a few encores. The hour strikes and the trigger is pulled mysteriously.

The explosion is immediate but silent, for the voids of infinite space do not admit of any sound. The most spectacular explosion in creation, it is swift as thought yet silent as doom. In one great leap the incandescent gases come rushing out; the star begins to expand at the rate of a hundred miles a second. Inside a day it may have increased its volume a billionfold, its light a millionfold. If before it was a "dwarf" star, not unlike the sun, it now is a giant among giants; a super-giant, to say the least. For the moment of its glory it has no rival in the realm of transparent space.

But it cannot last long, it can stay but a few days or hours at the pinnacle of its fame, and what are a few hours or days? A cosmical instant. Its brilliance soon begins to decline, but it flares up again and again, as if unwilling to pass into oblivion. The star is, figuratively speaking, thrown into convulsions, it is shaken up by the explosion of a few forgotten smaller charges, untouched in the general blow-up. But, no matter how unwilling the star is, fade away it must. It may be a matter of months, or years perhaps, but in the end the morgue claims its prey.

Observed by Tycho Barhe

It was not until the year 1572 that a new star was seriously and systematically observed by Tycho Barhe, the famous Danish astronomer, who gave his name to it. When he first saw this miraculous object he could hardly believe his eyes, and summoned the servants who were following him to confirm his discovery. For a time this nova was as bright as the planet Venus and could be seen in broad daylight. When we now look in the spot where Tycho observed his nova we cannot find a star brighter than the twelfth magnitude, and it is doubtful whether the remains of the nova are at all visible. A drop in brilliance of at least four million to one!

Other spectacular new stars were Keppler's Nova, which appeared in 1604 in the foot of Ophiuchus"; the new star of 1901, Nova Persei, which in one night rose from the twelfth magnitude to be almost the brightest star in the sky. Perhaps the best-known new star of them all is Nova Aquilae No. 3, the new star appearing in the constellation Aquila on June 8, 1918. It was discovered independently from different parts of the world by professionals and amateurs alike. Subsequent reconstruction of the events from the plates in the Harvard collection showed that before June 6, 1918, the star had been of the eleventh magnitude, 10,000 times fainter than a star of the first magniture.

Increased Steadily

By a piece of good luck the region of the sky in which this nova was to appear was photographed at Harvard on June 7, and the nova shown to be of the seventh magnitude. From then on it increased steadily in brightness. As the night progressed and darkness descended upon Japan, it had reached the fourth magnitude, bright enough to be seen with the naked eye, but not conspicuous enough to be noticed by anyone not searching for it. By the time, however, that the sun had set in India, the nova had reached the second magnitude, and was promptly discovered in Madras, then in Russia and Asia Minor, and as night darkened over Europe and Africa it was seen by hundreds of people.

The next night it had become the brightest star in the sky (Sirius being invisible). For almost a year it remained visible to the naked eye, and now, eight years later, it has almost come back to its pre-explosion stage.

But among the novae discovered in recent years such bright ones are exceptions. Since the photographic camera has been enlisted in the service of astronomy many faint novae have been discovered, very largely at Harvard. Novae of the ninth, tenth or even the eleventh magnitude are no exceptions among these later ones.

Old Ones Found Again

Only a few weeks ago another one was found at Harvard, quite an old one, which had been bright for a short time in 1897 only. Looking up his history on the large collection of plates at Harvard, which comprises the complete history of the sky since 1889, it was found that our "rogues' gallery" did not contain any evidence of this new star before May, 1897, nor was it seen again after October of the same year. It came was photographed and collapsed.

Astronomical observations of new stars necessarily remained of a somewhat sketchy nature until the advent of the spectroscope. All that could be done without it consisted solely of determining the change of light. The change in character of the light, the most important change of all, had to be left for the spectroscope. The first nova to be observed spectroscopically was the nova of 1866, Nova Coronae, which also was the first nova that could be identified with a faint star previously known. It was then that people first began to suspect that a "new" star might not be really "new," but merely an "old" star made temporarily.

Presence of Hydrogen

One thing we are always sure of, and that is the presence of hydrogen: the surface of such a new star must consist very largely of enormous flames of hydrogen gas. Some novae, not content with blazing forth themselves and changing from insignificant dwarfs into giants of the most luminous kind, try to excite their surroundings to perform tricks upon them. Nova Persei of 1901 very quickly produced a nebula around itself, and this nebula was expanding in all directions with incredible velocity.

At first people thought that here we had a case of particles shot out by the nova at great speed; later, however, it was shown that what really happened was no more than that an enormous amount of dark nebulous matter lying around the star as an envelope was being illuminated by the nova and reflected the light back to us.

The growth of this envelope was due simply to the fact that it took the light several weeks, even months, to reach the outlying portions of it. As seen from us, therefore, the luminous nebula was expanding with the speed of light. For the first time in history we could see the speed of light, of a disc-like appearance when seen in a telescope. For more than two years after the first outburst this nebula kept on growing, until in 1921 it had a diameter 800 times as large as that of the sun, and surpassed the sun 500,000,000 times in bulk.

Why It's an Explosion

When it comes to what happens, once a star has made up its mind to become a nova, the spectroscope has taught us much. Owing to the investigations of Wright, of the Lick Observatory, and of Davidovich, of Moscow and Harvard, we have a fairly clear idea of the whole performance. The particular novae which have contributed most data are Nova Aquilae of 1918, and Nova Pictoris of 125. The last mentioned was very slow in getting a maximum light, thereby giving us a chance to study its behaviour during the most interesting stage of its career.

Previous to 1925 Nova Pictoris appeared as a star of the thirteenth magnitude, in reality a star three times fainter than the sun, and 700 light years distant. In all probability it was a little smaller than the sun in size, a little cooler, a little redder and of about the same weight.

The next step in its development known to us was derived from photographs of the spectrum taken on May 25-28. Its diameter was then more than forty million miles, fifty times larger than that of the sun, and its temperature about 6,000 degrees centigrade. On June 9 the nova reached its greatest brilliance, outshining the sun 10,000 times; its diameter was then almost eighty million miles, ninety times greater than that of the sun. In a few weeks this star had blown itself up from a sphere a little smaller than the sun to one ninety times larger in bulk! Between May 28 and June 9, twelve days, its radius had grown almost twenty million miles, an average speed of twenty miles a second!

Only a Mild Case

And this is a mild case; we have known novae that hurled out the gases at their surface at a rate of a thousand miles a second. Now you will understand why we call a nova outburst an explosion; it beats anything we can do on earth.

This brings up another interesting fact, namely, that one star can give almost as much light as an entire universe. The combined light of all the stars in the Milky Way system is about three hundred million times that of the sun. Yet the nova of 1572 alone for the short time of its maximum brilliance was about one hundred million times brigher than the sun. The Andromeda nebula, taken as a whole, gives about a billion times more light than the sun; the nova of 1885 alone gave more than one hundred million times as much.

The same thing holds for the other spirals in which new stars have been discovered; in general the new star at maximum gives more than one-tenth as much light as the whole island universe with its billions of stars together.

We must again return to the question of what causes the outburst of a nova. Several suggestions have been made, but nearly all have had to be scrapped. It cannot be a head-on collision between two stars, for such a collision would not happen more often than once in a trillion years in the entire universe, and we see novae appear at the rate of one a year, on the average. It cannot be because of the heat generated by the friction of a star passing through a nebula, for, from what we know about the density of nebulae, it would take millions of years rather than a day to produce enough heat to make the star explode. And so, cornered, we now attribute the cause of the explosion to forces acting in the interior of the star.

No Star Immune

Finally, there is one more significant thing about novae, and that is the enormous frequency at which they occur. Even with our present incomplete surveys of the heavens, we catch a nova about once a year. Obviously we can only catch the brighter ones, and the number that escaped detection must be even greater.

Our universe contains probably fifty billion stars. We also know that the earth has existed for at least five hundred million years, and the sun for probably billions of years.

Now it does not seem reasonable to suppose that the past fifty years have been any different, in the universe as a whole, from the last billion years, and we have every right to assume that outbursts of novae have always been about as frequent as they are now.

Then at least five hundred million novae must have appeared during as many years past, which means that during the astronomically very short time that the earth has lived, one per cent of all the stars in the sky must have been novae.

This leaves us with only two alternatives: either all stars have been novae, or will in time become novae, or "once a nova, always a nova." Either the nova stage is something which every star has to go through at least once, or it is a disease, a habit which, once contracted, returns time and time again. Although at present we have little or no evidence pointing either way, astronomical opinion in general favors the second notion.

Patient's Life Saved by Gland Grafting

Through the self-sacrifice of a convict a wonderful gland grafting experiment had been successfully performed in Serbia. The convict, Ilija Krajon, had been sentenced to death for robberies and a murder, and as the result of his self sacrifice a man of sixty-three who was in a decline has become rejuvenated. The transfer was made by a Russian physician, Dr. Peter Kolesnikov, according to the Voronoff treatment, at the Serbian town of Zajetchar, and he claims that the operation has been very successful up to the present. So weak that he could not walk, the patient at the Zajetchar Hospital left a few days afterwards apparently strong and well, and boasting that he felt thirty years younger. Krajon agreed to Dr. Kolesnikov's request to remove a gland and made the sacrifice in the humane cause indicated. The rejuvenated man declares that he feels better every day, and Dr. Kolesnikov proposes to report the case in detail to the Serbian Physics Association.

Famous Errand Boys

Cyrus Field, whose name is associated with the earliest Atlantic cable, began life as an errand boy, and H. M. Stanley, the African explorer, was a butcher boy. William Chambers, founder of Chambers' Journal, was originally a bookseller's errand boy; he rose to be Lord Provost of Glasgow. Sir Thomas Lipton began business life as an errand boy, and the Right Hon. J. H. Thomas, M.P., former Secretary of State for the Colonies in the British Cabinet, went to work as an errand boy at nine years of age.

The Tick of the Minute

By CHRISTINA ROSS FRAME, in Pleasant Hours

IT SEEMED to Isabel Gordon, aged fifteen, and sorely in need of pocket money, that a real story-book chance had come her way.

The Gordon family were practising rigid economy in a strenous effort to make the final payment of the mortgage on their home. Counting the cents in a dollar was a new occupation for the younger members.

Six months ago Muriel Mayne's casual remark would have had no particular interest for Isabel; today it brought quick interest.

"Aunt Harriet's companion is off for her holidays, and aunt is looking for a reader while she is away," observed Muriel. "I am reading for her this week; but next week mother and I are going on a visit; so aunt will have to get someone else. It is only an hour, from eight-thirty to nine-thirty; then Mr. Lansing, the mill manager, comes to talk over business matters, and his secretary does the letters."

"Mrs. Mayne is a splendid business woman, I've heard father say," remarked Isabel. "What a pity it is that she is losing her sight."

"Yes," agreed Muriel, "aunt has made the mill pay. She knows well how to count the cents in a dollar, and though she is just, she certainly is not over-generous. I hate this morning reading; but father said I had to do it. It will be a relief all round when the cataracts on her eyes are ready for operation."

"What kind of reading do you do?" inquired Isabel.

"The morning paper and the few personal letters she receives, and, maybe, an article or a report that she has some special intrest in, and, of course, every item on the financial page of the newspaper. That is the most important part for her."

"That doesn't sound hard," remarked Isabel.

"Aunt Harriet gives twenty-five cents for the hour, and she sees that she gets her money's worth," laughed Muriel.

"Twenty-five cents a day is one dollar and fifty a week," thought Isabel, with a covert glance at her shabby shoes, and a disturbing mental calculation in regard to the price of new ones.

"Do you think I could read to suit her?"

"I am sure you could. I'll tell Aunt Harriet about you, and let you know. She is one of the tick-of-the-minute kind, and may have engaged someone."

"Oh, if you only would," breathed Isabel. "I'd like to know right away!"

"I'll remember," promised Muriel, somewhat surprised at Isabel's eagerness for what, to her mind, was an irksome, poorly-paid, hour's work.

Muriel was as good as her word. She ran into the Gordons that evening to tell Isabel that Aunt Harriet had not engaged a reader, and would she go there to-morrow at five. "I'll have read the morning paper; but aunt will have an old one there for a test. So that she will be sure that you are not making mistakes in the stock quotations."

"I'd better keep this to myself until I'm sure of the situation," decided Isabel, "though if mother were at home I'd talk it over with her."

Mrs. Mayne's eyes were too dim to see the bright, pretty young girl, with shabby boots well polished; but she liked the quality of Isabel's voice, and her self-reliant get-down-to-work manner.

"I'm Isabel Gordon," she announced, "and I've come to read."

"You'll find a paper on the desk. Read me page sixteen."

Thanks to Muriel's remarks in regard to her aunt's newspaper tastes, and Isabel's strenuous practice on financial pages, she was able to read the columns straight down through "bid and asked" without break or bungle, enigmatical abbreviations and fractions notwithstanding. There was a lot of reading on page sixteen, and Isabel went through it to the very last item. "It is done," she announced.

"Yes. Very well, Miss Isabel Gordon, you may consider yourself engaged. I shall expect you tomorrow morning at eight-thirty, to read until nine-thirty. Saturday is pay day."

There was a mild breeze at the Gordon tea table when Isabel told her story. "I'm a wage-earner, too," she announced, proudly.

Mr. Gordon smiled rather wistfully at the bright young face "You must remember to do your very best, and to be prompt," he counselled. Being prompt was the lion in Isabel's way.

"Yes, indeed," promised Isabel. "Muriel told me how fussy her aunt was about people being on the tick of the minute. She said it was an awful bore; but her father said that she must be on time, and daren't be otherwise. I'm nearer to Oakdene than Muriel, so I'll be sure to—"

"Hüh," sniffed her brother Tom, "if you are there at eight-thirty, ready for work, there'll be something doing beforehand in this family."

Isabel marched out without deigning a reply.

"I suppose I had better see to getting Isabel up and off in time," remarked Marian to Janet, the eldest sister.

"No, don't," advised Janet; "this is Isabel's affair, and let her take the responsibility. She must learn to be punctual, and the sooner she begins the better. Give her the alarm clock, and take it as a matter of course that the responsibility for being up is hers alone."

For two bright weeks Isabel heeded the alarm clock's shrill call, and was out of bed at the first deafening whir-rrrr. As a consequence, she was able to help Marian with the breakfast, and have leisure for a pleasant walk to her employer's.

Isabel's brisk business-like air, her clear voice, intelligent reading, promptness in arrival and departure, were leading Mrs. Mayne to think that here was a young girl after her own heart. Then the trouble began.

(To Be Concluded)

I Wonder

I wonder why the stars come out at night
And shine like little lanterns in the sky?
And why they disappear and lose their light
When morning comes, and sunshine round doth lie.
I wonder why.

I wonder why the fishes in the brook
Can swim all day beneath the water clear,
First here, then there, so startled as I look,
And sit and watch them come, then disappear.
I wonder why.

I wonder what puts color in the flowers,
And why the birds sing sweetest after rain.
I wonder how we count the passing hours,
Just why my mother's kiss heals every pain.
I wonder.

I wonder why the trees bud in the Spring
And shelter us in Summer's scorching ray,
Then fade and fall like fairies whispering,
And change their shade in Autumn's early day.
I wonder.

I wonder why God put me on this earth
To wonder all about the things around.
I'm wondering now and have almost from birth
Just where my life will lead, my pathway bound.
I wonder.

The Shooting of the Albatross

Most of us have read "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," the wonderful imaginative poem by Coleridge; but it is not generally known that the shooting of the albatross was suggested to Coleridge by Wordsworth. Wordsworth had just been reading Shelvocke's Voyage, where a similar incident is recorded.

George Shelvocke was an eighteenth-century privateer concerning whose career little is known beyond what is told in his own account of his adventures, published in 1728.

He was sent out by his employers to cruise against the Spaniards and succeeded in taking several valuable prizes; but much of the spoil that should have benefited those who fitted out the expedition was shared among the crew, Shelvocke himself appropriating the bulk of the plunder.

Adventures were many and Shelvocke had much to tell. He sailed from Plymouth as captain of the Speedwell, a vessel of twenty-four guns, with a crew of 106, in company with the Success, whose commander was his superior officer. But the ships soon separated in a gale, and Shelvocke took care not to meet his commander at the appointed rendezvous. The two men were not friends, and each made war on the Spaniards in his own way, and the Spaniards paid.

Shelvocke's first capture was a Portuguese ship which he met off the Brazilian coast, and which he held to ransom. The passage round Cape Horn was difficult as usual, and the Speedwell was blown far south of her course. It was here, in a succession of gales and persistent bad weather, that the albatross was shot.

"We had not had the sight of one fish of any kind since we were come to the southward of the Straits of Le Maire (Shelvocke writes), nor one sea bird except a disconsolate black albatross, who accompanied us for several days, hovering about us as if he had lost himself, till Hatley, my second captain, imagining from his color that it might be some ill omen, after some fruitless attempts at length shot the albatross, not doubting, perhaps, that we should have a fair wind after it."

But when they had rounded the Horn and "the sun now rose upon the right," they had contrary winds and foul weather for six weeks more.

When Shelvocke at last returned home as a passenger in a merchant ship he was promptly arrested for piracy; but he managed to escape and fled the country, and that is the last we know of this adventurer whose life has given us one of the immortal chapters of our literature.—My Magazine.

Wild Cattle of Chillingham

Two weeks ago a story was published on this page about the wild herd of British cattle that still live on the estate of the Marquis of Tankerville. Mr. Sam D. Craig has written to The Colonist correcting an error in the name of the estate. It should have been Chillingham, not Chillingworth. If ever any of you should go to Northumberland you may see the famous herd from a safe distance. The editor is glad to publish this correction.

Competition—"The Finest Holiday Place"

August is here and half your long midsummer holiday is over. Before Labor Day The Colonist wants to publish "A Page for Children by Children."

Write a description of camp or picnic or expedition, telling all you can about the scenery. If you can get photographs, so much the better. These must be clear or the engraver cannot reproduce them. Many a home on Vancouver Island is lovely. Those who cannot leave home may yet have "The Finest Holiday Place." Use your eyes and tell just what you see. Your essay need not be long.

The editor especially wants the little children to write stories.

The Gulf Islands have many lovely spots, and there are a thousand others on Vancouver Island, from Victoria to Campbell River and all along the West Coast there are beautiful scenes. There are rivers and falls and even glaciers near the homes of some of the young people. Perhaps a reader lives on the Mainland or in the Upper Country and would like to tell us about some beauty spot there. We will welcome such competitors.

The conditions are easy. Your essay must be your own work, and is open to every boy and girl under fifteen. The competition closes on Monday, August 23. With your compositions send your own name and address with the name of your school.

Three prizes will be given: $5 for the best, $3 for the second and $2 for the third. As many as are good will be published. Title of essay, "The Finest Holiday Place." Address "Page for Children," Daily Colonist, Victoria, B.C.

An English Painter—Joshua Reynolds

Two hundred years ago a little boy of three played with his many brothers and sisters in the garden of the rectory of Plympton, in the lovely English county of Devon. His name was Joshua, and he was the tenth of the eleven children of the Rev. Samuel Reynolds.

At a very early age Joshua began to draw. Indeed, although his father, like many clergymen of that time, kept a school, little Joshua was allowed to neglect his studies that he might pursue his favorite pastime. He copied the drawings of his sisters and found better models in the prints in the books in his father's library. Among these was "The Book of Emblems" which his father's grandmother, a Dutch lady, had brought with her from Holland.

Joshua was only eight years old, we are told, when he made so good a drawing of Plympton School as to surprise and delight his father.

The lad continued to spend his time on drawing, though he had no masters, to the neglect of his lessons. All his life Reynolds missed the knowledge he should have gained in his boyhood.

When he was nineteen young Reynolds went up to London to study painting under one of the masters of that time. The talented pupil soon became a better artist than his master, a Mr. Hudson. After two years' study he returned to his home in Devonshire. Among the people he met in London was the poet, Alexander Pope, for whose works the young painter had a great admiration. A picture of an elderly servant woman and one of a boy reading by reflected light were painted about this time. He had leisure while at home to observe the beauties of his native Devon, and doubtless began to gather that store of general knowledge for which in after life he gained the praise of so learned and gifted a man as his friend, Dr. Samuel Johnson.

When he was twenty-two the young painter, with two of his sisters, moved to Plymouth Dock. Here he became known to a large circle as a portrait painter. The young gentleman made many friends, and before long he went to live in London, where he had better opportunities of study. Among his friends was Captain Keppel. This distinguished officer, afterwards Lord Keppel, invited Reynolds to go to the Mediterranean with him when he was sent there to protect the British merchants from Algerine pirates. Reynolds, who had long wished to go to Rome, gladly accepted the generous invitation. As a boy he had learned to admire the works of Raphael and Michael Angelo, but hitherto had no opportunity of studying them.

At the Mediterranean stations the young artist was warmly welcomed and received many commissions to paint portraits of the officers.

In Rome and other Italian cities the young English artist spent three years in the study of great pictures. He copied little, for he believed such labor was a waste of time. He learned what great painting was, and though he did not follow the examples set by the old masters, he returned to his native country with an enriched mind and improved skill. This was soon recognized, and rich and titled men and women flocked to his studio. In the homes of many nobles the portraits of ancestors by the brush of Reynolds are among the greatest treasures.

Many of the loveliest pictures of this artist are those of children. "The Strawberry Girl," "The Shepherd Boy," "The Children in the Wood," are among those familiar to most of you by reproductions. A biographer has written: "Of children he seems to have been remarkably fond; nor can one forbear imagining that he has romped or ridden with them on the parlor broom, sorrowed with them over the loss of their favorite birds, smiled with them on their being endowed with new finery, and enjoyed all the mixed surprise and triumph expressed in the face of Muscripula on catching a mouse in a trap."

Reynolds was not only a great painter, but an accomplished gentleman and a delightful companion. He was one of that wonderful circle of friends of which Dr. Johnson was the head. Goldsmith, the poet Burke, orator and statesman; Garrick, the actor, and other eminent men of the time welcomed him and often partook of his hospitality.

As years passed away riches and honors became the reward of the labor and the genius of Joshua Reynolds. He was one of the founders and the first president of the Royal Academy and was knighted by the young King, George III. As president, Sir Joshua Reynolds delivered a series of admirable lectures to the artists of that day.

His friend Burke said of the English painter when death had removed him from the world whose beauty he loved:

"Sir Joshua Reynolds was, in many accounts, one of the most memorable men of his time. He was the first Englishman who added the praise of the elegant arts to the other glories of his country."

The Most Useful People

Certainly, in our own little sphere, it is not the most active people to whom we owe the most.

Among the common people whom we know it is not necessarily those who are busiest, not those who, meteor-like, are ever on the rush after some visible charge and work. It is the lives, like the stars, which simply pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, up to which we look and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage.

It seems to me that there is reassurance here for many of us who seem to have no chance for active usefulness. It is good to know that no man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

The Traveler's Return

Sweet to the morning traveller
The skylark's early song,
Whose twinkling wings are seen at fits
The dewy light among.

And cheering to the traveller
The gales that round him play,
When faint and heavily he drags
Along his noon-tide way.

And when beneath the unclouded sun
Full wearily toils he,
The flowing water makes to him
A pleasant melody.

And when the evening light decays
And all is calm around,
There is sweet music to his ear
In the distant sheep-bell's sound.

But oh! of all the delightful sounds
Of evening or of morn,
The sweetest is the voice of love,
That welcomes his return.

—Robert Southey.

A Little Life

A little work, a little play—
To keep us going—and so—
Good-day.

A little warmth, a little light
Of love's bestowing—and so—
Good-night.

A little fun to match the sorrow
Of each day's growing—and so—
Good-morrow.

A little trust that when we die
We reap our sowing—and so—
Good-bye!

—George Du Maurier.

ZOO TAILS

By LESLIE G. MAINLAND, F.Z.S.

WE feel proud of the fact that we have no tails, but really I think we ought to be rather sorry at missing a good thing.

In the beginning of life a tail was a step upwards, not downwards. A tiny little lump of jelly which was simply an eating machine grew a tail which turned him into an adventurous voyager. He wagged his tail and it drove him through the water in search of food instead of waiting for food to come to him. He was a much superior creature once he had a tail, and had taken the first step towards finding a brain.

Yet we humans sneer at tails. Think of the ways Zoo animals use their tails. Take this list:

South African monkeys—An extra hand for tree work.

Horses and cattle—A fly awatter.

Beavers—Combined rudder and alarm gun.

Giant ant-eaters—A cosy sleeping blanket.

Many baby lizards—A feeding bottle. (They live on the fat of their tails until they are old enough to catch food for themselves.)

Spiny lizards—A key to their bedroom doors. (After they have crawled into a rocky crack, no enemy can get past the tail-spikes).

Kangaroos—An extra leg and a jumping pole.

Rattlesnakes—A scare for burglars.

You can make the list as long as you like by thinking out other cases for yourself.

I only remember seeing one Zoo animal who seemed really sorry (for the moment) that he had a tail. It was a monkey who had escaped out of his big open-air cage. He climbed to the top, looked around at the beauties of freedom, and began to chatter to the monkeys who were still inside.

While he was telling them all they were missing, his tail dangled down through the wire mesh-work. Two of his old friends made a spring for it and exercised themselves on this living rope. The owner of the tail yelled with rage, but he could not get away before the keepers got a ladder and grabbed him, blessing the other monkeys who had acted as policemen.

The picture shows a creature which goes one better than climbing up someone else's tail. "Bessie"—the kinkajou, has the gift of climbing up her own tail if you hook it round your wrist or finger.

She does not mind hanging head downward for a short time, for she is built for an "any-way-up" life. You know this because her fur does not "lie" in any particular way and she does not mind which way she is stroked.

After hanging for a minute or two, she does a snake-like twist, grabs her tail with a forepaw, and then climbs aloft until she can curl up on your arm.

Here is a useful little hint concerning a tail which a Zoo keeper once gave me. "The one safe way to handle a skunk," said he, "is to hold him up by the tail. So long as he is held in this way he can't use his 'poison gas.' The skunk never shoots unless his tail is straight up like a furious cat's."

Then the keeper was called away. I know now what to do with a skunk if I meet one, to catch him smartly by the tail and hold him out at arm's length. But I never found out the right way to let him go again. So I suppose I should have to keep on holding him.

One of the most wonderful tails in the Zoo belongs to the Giant Stick Insect, which is about a foot long. At the end of her tail is an egg-gun, a kind of spring pistol which will shoot a hard black egg at least twenty-five feet. You can hear those eggs "ping" against the glass walls of her cage when she is shooting. A photographer who was taking her picture at the Zoo was shot in the waistcoat!

The idea behind this gun is to scatter the eggs so that a few will get a chance to hatch out. If they were laid in a bunch some animal might come along and swallow the lot at one mouthful.

You will get quite a number of examples at the Zoo in which tails are used as food stores. Fat-tailed sheep and fat-tailed desert mice can live for quite a bit on the spare stores they trail behind them—just like the camel and his hump.

Some baby lizards are born with such swollen "feeding-bottle" tails that they seem to have two heads.

Marmaduke, the Oldest of London Tortoises

A London letter tells of one of the wonders of that very wonderful place, the Zoological Gardens. Here is what the writer says:

There are few whose duty it is to be entrusted with the care of living creatures which existed in the reign of Charles II.

This has been the work of Keeper H. Budd, during his fifteen years' service at the London Zoo, his charges being the giant tortoises, whose ages range up to over 260 years.

Keeper Budd is of a thoughtful disposition, and little wonder, for, though he has now left the venerable corps of veterans for more sprightly reptiles housed near by, their romantic history prompts one to delve into the past.

"There are about half a dozen who are well on their way to scoring their second century, but Marmaduke is the oldest," he said.

"Marmaduke is known to be at least 260 years old, so he must have been alive at the time of the Great Plague and Fire of London, but, when the weather is hot, he can 'foot it' with the best of them.

"The best way to get Marmaduke moving is to sit on his back and hold an apple, stuck on a stick, before his nose. He will chase the apple like a donkey would a carrot. Lots of kiddies get rides on him, around the paddock this way.

"When the evenings are cool, Marmaduke shows symptoms of old age, for, worn out with the day's exertions, he is too tired to walk back to the house and two of us have to carry him in—and he weighs a quarter of a ton!"

In Memory of Eugene Field

From time to time poems of the American poet, Eugene Field, have appeared on this page. He loved the little ones and wrote to please them—both in prose and verse.

He has touched the hearts of his countrymen, young and old. Though he has been dead several years his body has lately been taken to Kenilworth, near the city of Chicago. Here a very beautiful memorial of the poet has been made.

Above two sleeping children an angel stands ready to place a spray of blossoms on their heads. On either side of the figures of the little ones are beautiful carvings illustrating the "Sugar Plum Tree", and "Wynken, Blyken and Nod." Do you know the poems, little folks?

THIS CANADA OF OURS — "Radisson's Story--Told by Himself" — By J. S. MORRISON

Canada's Man of the Mountains

by FRANK YEIGH

HOW would you like to climb mountains for a living?

How would you like to run into electric storms on mighty summits and become a human current?

How would you like to see your broncho stumble down a mountain side, carrying your pack and alpenstock?

How would you like to lose your way on an alpine peak by being overtaken by darkness, and discover yourself dangling over a thousand feet or so of steep rock wall?

How would you like to negotiate yawning crevasses in ice walls, or leap across "bergschrunds," as the space between a glacier and a mountain is called? or to creep over precarious snow bridges or cross roaring torrents on the back of a saddle pony? Or run across bears, big and bigger?

And yet these are merely a few samples of experiences that have befallen Arthur O. Wheeler, Canada's leading mountain man, as a surveyor of summits, a maker of mountain maps, otherwise a topographical surveyor.

Arthur O. Wheeler, topographical surveyor.

Tented life in the Canadian Rockies. In the centre is seen a view of the head of Moraine lake in the valley of the Ten Peaks.

On the roof of the world in the Canadian Selkirks.

He's an interesting man to meet, especially around a fire in a camp of the Alpine Club of Canada, of which he was one of the originals and for many years its director. No one knows our Western mountains better than he, and probably no one has climbed more peaks or had so many thrilling adventures in the course of his day's work than this F.R.G.S. Canadian.

Mr. Wheeler is resigning as director of the Alpine Club of Canada at its annual camp fire meeting. He has served the club unstintedly and has had the satisfaction of seeing it grow from a few members to several hundred, representing not only Canada but many other countries. Deserved recognition has also come to him in being an honorary member of the parent mountaineering organization of the world, the Alpine Club (of England), of the Club Alpin Francais and the Appalachian Club of the United States.

This inveterate and veteran mountain climber has experienced nature in all her varied moods. He discovered, for instance, that the spectre of the Brocken is not confined to the Harz Mountains in Germany. This remarkable illusion was first seen by him while climbing Cougar Mountain in the Selkirks.

Shadow Returns Bow

The requisite conditions are a nearby bank of cloud and the sun in nearly the same horizontal plane as the spectator. The shadow of the spectator is thus thrown up on the cloudbank, its size depending upon the distance the cloud is away. In this case the shadow was large and surrounded by a rainbow-lined disk of not very distinct prismatic colors. It is said that if the cloud is very dry the shadow of companions, as well as your own, can be seen; but if the cloud-bank is very damp each person can see only his own shadow. In this case only the one shadow was visible.

He also saw the same curious phenomenon once before, on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, while observing angles on Sentinel Mountain. To the east the cliffs discended sheer for several thousand feet.

Along the face of the escarpment a dense bank of cloud had sprung from nowhere and blotted out the landscape. By putting out a hand one could almost touch it. To the west all was clear and the sun shining brightly. On the bank of cloud appeared a small circular disk, showing in very brilliant circles the colors of the rainbow. In the centre a sharply defined black manikin represented each of the spectators to himself. It was very ludicrous. You took off your hat; so did the manikin. You made him a polite bow; it was promptly returned. You held up your hands in deprecation; the manikin did likewise. The prismatic circle is called the "broken bow," but the background is not always in this form, sometimes appearing as a colored fringe.

Electricity's Forces

Electricity is also a mighty force to be reckoned with in the mountains. Here, too, Mr. Wheeler has had many remarkable adventures. One of his party, while climbing to a high point on a long mountain range extending westerly from Mt. Tupper, thus described such an experience: "Seated on the highest elevation, I began to sketch a portion of the view, while black thunderclouds sailed towards the ridge from the valley. Suddenly two stone slabs next to me and standing opposite each other, began to make a humming noise, the metal holder of my sketching pencil buzzed and my pick crackled strongly, especially when I grasped it. Simultaneously, a slight rain set in, and my fingers, also moistened by the rain, also buzzed. My companion was taken by a sudden fright and became incapable of uttering a sound. The cause of this phenomenon was clear to me at once, although I was not fully aware of the degree of danger which it might include. We were in an electric cloud. I remember to have heard a few thunder reports, a short time before, issuing from the same cloud which had now reached us. The main volume of electricity stored up in it had escaped by lightning. The rest escaped when it reached the ridge; and, to some extent, we ourselves involuntarily acted as conductors to the earth. A direct danger, therefore, was not present; for if the electric tension had still been great enough to generate lightning flashes, such would have been ejected before the clouds themselves touched the ridge. Nevertheless, the phenomenon was so strong that when I touched the pick on its metal mount I felt a strong shock, and at night the play of sparks would undoubtedly have been visible."

Vast Scenic World

Yet another element of wonder in our vast scenic world of the West is included in the meteorological or optical phenomena. Reference already has been made to electric storms and Brocken effects. There is the world of clouds to be studied. Anyone who has visited a mountain realm, declares Mr. Wheeler, is thrilled with sunrise and sunset effects, and the glorious color tints which nature paints the loftiest peaks. There is nothing more etherially beautiful than the highest summit in a range catching and holding for a few rare moments the last glint of color from a sinking sun. And equally inspiring is the corresponding sight at dawn, when the same peaks receive the first baptism of crimson, in striking contrast to the world of white in snow and ice still in the shadows further below. But there is the other realm of cloud effects, and especially of rainbows, which may be seen in every grade of intensity and in every conceivable position.

Some are high-arched in the sky, bridging wide valleys or spanning narrow canyons. Sometimes above, sometimes below, the promise of the dawn of the ages is repeated on a magnificent scale, and at other times the bands of color are so close as to give the impression that they may be touched or that the traditional pot of gold is within one's reach at the end of the spectrum.

The study of the formation and shape of clouds is also of interest. Standing on a high crest, clouds are often seen to form, on a bright, sunny day, below you even as you look at them and again to dissipate just as mysteriously. There will not be a cloud in the sky, and yet directly around some particular high peak a cloud will hang all day long.

Canine Companion

Mr. Wheeler had a dog as companion in his mountaineering work whose story is unique in the annals of the canine world.

Fritz was the name of a beautiful and intelligent spaniel who achieved a notable reputation, in both the Rockies and Selkirks, as an expert and fearless mountain climber. For years he was the inseparable companion of his master, and where duty led him, Fritz as dutifully followed. Thus the two surmounted many a mighty summit without an accident to mar their record, although dangers many and oft were encountered.

But a sad ending came one day. Mr. Wheeler was ascending the massive Mount Dawson, one of the kingly peaks of the Selkirks. Surrounding it are Mount Bonney, Mount Swanzy, the twin peaks of Castor and Pollux, and lordly Mount Sir Donald.

Fritz started out on the journey in high dog-spirits, which mean a constant tail-wagging and innumerable meanderings into by-paths and trails. Pluckily he swam a glacial stream and then steadied down to the hard work that lay before him. Many a nasty bit of climbing had to be negotiated by man and dog, where the coolest nerve and the greatest care had to be exercised. Mr. Wheeler was leading when he heard a single bark from Fritz that spoke of trouble. Turning, he saw his poor dog falling hundreds of feet down the mountain-side to death. Fritz's work as a mountaineer was finished; he had made his last climb. His master reached the body far below, and there, on the almost inaccessible steep of a gigantic mountain, cut with his knife an epitaph in memory of a great heart.

Fall of 700 Feet

Mr. Wheeler records in his journal: "Fritz was quite dead when he stopped rolling, after his fall of 700 feet to a ledge below. The loss of this old friend, who had been a companion in camp for many years and had such a first-class record as a mountain-climber, added to the startling realization of the result of a slip or a false step on our part, quite took the heart out of us, and we did not feel like further progress upward."

Fritz had had a previous experience that nearly cost him his dog life, while climbing Mount Swanzy, in the Selkirk group, near Glacier. He had, in fact, climbed nearly every peak up to that time in the Selkirks ascended by the survey party, but on this occasion he slipped on an ice slope and fell 300 feet in a series of Catherine wheels. "As he vanished over a ledge," says Mr. Wheeler, "we gave him up for dead, but he appeared a short distance below wagging his tail, and apparently little the worse for his fall."

Mr. Wheeler has met many grizzlies, big and bigger. One bear haul led to some juicy steaks from the youngster of the trio, while the old he-bear was only worth stock as soup. Once he faced a bear, the biggest, he declares, he had ever seen, on a narrow trail. The impasse was solved by the shaggy brute side-stepping and back-waddling until he disappeared in the timber. But sometimes such an encounter leads to a battle for life. One of the survey party possesses the hide of a grizzly, nailed to his cabin door at Field, with a dozen bullet holes ventilating the big outstretched skin, for it took that many bullets to end the fight with the huge grizzly.

Incorrigible Thief

Bruin is an incorrigible thief, especially where there is a near-by food cache of a surveyor, for Mr. Bear makes no invidious distinctions. But when the cook found that his uninvited visitor had helped itself to a side or two of bacon, a crock of butter, several pails of jam and a stock of greens by way of salad, the joke was carried too far, though the bear also came a cropper when he evidently tried his teeth on a camera and a box of photo plates!

Among Mr. Wheeler's varied alpine experiences was one where he found himself stranded on a mountain top and overtaken by darkness. Night climbing, he declares, lacks charm, and we would agree with him! "Twice I felt my body swinging in space as I saw the camp fire thousands of feet below." But he came through the ordeal successfully.

The explorer-surveyor found an old cache of food on a high plateau, including a tin of corned beef, which, after twelve years, proved to be a delicacy as a change from salt pork.

Once he was caught on a slender trestle by a freight train. There was nothing for it but to hang on to the side timbers as best he might—not a comfortable position with a pack on your back and a hundred-foot drop below! "It was the longest and slowest train I ever saw," was his comment.

Another day there was a pack pony that, balking on a precipitous trail, fell backwards down the side of a canyon. The poor beast made several efforts to stop and then disappeared. He was found lodged three hundred feet down, head downwards between two trees. The pack had not been displaced and only the ends of the alpenstocks broken off. With the exception of a few bruises the pony escaped uninjured, but it was cured of balking.

Scientist Says "Death Ray" Is a Vain Hope

THE Abbe Moureux, famous as the director of the Observatory of Bruges and as a popular writer on scientific subjects, recently publishing in Le Petit Journal an interesting article on the peculiarities of light waves. He said:

"Do you recall the 'death ray' discovered by a certain Matthews? All the newspapers wondered on that occasion at the unanimity with which the most eminent physicists disbelieved in that discovery.

"The domain of radiations is now an explored and conquered field, and nothing in it suggested results like those hastily announced in this case. I wish now to make a little excursion with my readers through this domain.

"When the light ray was submitted to analysis we could not help thinking that something went from the luminous body to the dark body which it illuminates. Light, which flies at the rate of 300,000 kilometers a second, accomplishes its journey, not by great leaps and bounds but by short, quick steps, in the manner in which the shock of a stone thrown in the water transmits itself through the mass—that is to say, by means of waves or undulations which are transmitted even in a vacuum. If a body radiates light or heat these waves are produced. They move with the same swiftness, but each wave has its characteristics and is distinguished from the others by its length.

Formation of Waves

"If, for example, we take the colors of the spectrum and measure the length of each color wave we find that red is formed of waves which are larger than violet's, so that while 2,500 waves in the violet are needed to constitute a millimeter, 1,500 waves in the red give an equal length.

"As in both cases our waves move 300,000 kilometers a second, a simple division will prove that to obtain the sensation of red our retina must receive 375 trillions of vibrations in the same length of time. The violet will become visible when 750 trillions of vibrations a second are reached.

"Outside of these limits color does not exist for the human eye. But that does not mean the absence of radiation, and the proof of it is that if our eyes remain insensitive we cannot say that much for the photographic plate which discloses rays of the spectrum beyond violet. This region, called ultra-violet, is characterized by very small waves. It is light unnoticed by our eyes, but clearly seen, it appears, according to Sir John Lubbock, by the eyes of the ant. And the spectrum continues out with shorter and shorter waves.

Minute Vibrations

"Unfortunately, after we reach 850 trillions of vibrations these are so minute that they no longer pass through our optical instruments and it is necessary to study them with quartz lenses. A little further and the waves are only two ten-thousandths of a millimeter in length. They travel at the rate of 1,500 trillions of vibrations a second. Quartz refuses to work; our plates remain insensitive and the air no longer transmits anything.

"But physicists are not discouraged by so small a thing. Fluorine will replace quartz. We shall make plates without gelatine and operate in a vacuum. We attain waves close to one ten-thousandth of a millimeter, with twenty-five quatrillions of vibrations a second. But, alas, difficulties increase and become insurmountable. Flourine is no longer traversible.

"We search for twenty years and finally hit upon a stratagem. Prisms give way to mirrors, on which we trace parallel flutings, 600 a millimeter, and thus we obtain admirable spectrums. Thanks to these networks, we reach a wave length needing 20,000 undulations to cover a millimeter. Then we exceed that figure by means of electrical sparks in the vacuum, under tensions of more than 600,000 volts, and we arrive at the extreme limits of the ultra-violet with waves of one one hundred-thousandth of a millimeter.

Enter the X-Ray

"But the spectrum continues further and now the X-rays enter upon the scene. This time the undulations laugh at our artificial network. The most opaque bodies could not stop them. The gamma rays of radium fall into this category and unheard of artifices were needed to evaluate these short wave lengths. Consider that a millimeter here contains something like twenty thousand millions.

"Let us pass now to the other end of the spectrum. Beyond red we find the infra-red, with long waves, making impressions on our thermometers.

"But here we are already in contact with the electric waves whose emissions influence our wireless receivers, and we no longer see any reason for limiting our wave lengths, some of which attain twenty-four kilometers in length.

"So between these last and the shortest undulations given by radium rays the entire gap is filled. We have met in our excursion no 'death ray.' Doubtless there are some very penetrating radiations, like the X-ray, in which radio-active substances exercise a destructive effect on our organisms, but their action is never instantaneous, and, in my opinion, there would have to be a vast amount of Matthews radiation to become homocidal in less time than it would take to say so."

Astronomers Report Loss of Three Comets

Astronomers, in a recent inventory of the universe, have written off their books three more comets, Biela, Brorsen and Tempel, while two others are reported missing. The verdict in the case of the first three is accidental death. Remains of Biela's comet, however, continue to haunt the solar neighborhood in the form of showers of meteors. Holmes' comet has been advertised in the lost columns of The Celestial Times, and more information is urgently wanted. When last seen, in 1906, it was scantily clad and had a very small tail. It has not kept its dates since. Wolf's comet of 1884, one of Jupiter's household, looked feeble last year and is not expected to live long.

A Deep-Sea Parasite

The shark, that dread pirate of sea life, is an unwilling supporter of the remora, or sucking-fish. The latter's mouth is so formed with suction-like disks that it can fasten itself to the body of a shark, which is unable to shake the parasite off. The purpose of the remora is to be on hand when the shark kills its prey. Some of the "leavings" of the ensuing feast then fall to the lot of the remora. Thus does the sucking-fish eke out its existence with no labor save to "hang on" to its unwilling benefactor.

Clever Adaptation of Old Sliding Device Made to Car's Side Curtains—Small German Automobile Has Power Unit Placed in Rear

By HAROLD BLANCHARD

The patent clasp commonly used in tobacco pouches, in which the movement of a sliding member locks or unlocks the specially formed teeth which constitutes the seam, has been cleverly adapted to side curtains by a German firm.

As the illustration shows, the side curtains attached to the doors are securely "laced to" the stationary side curtains by movement of the sliding member. The side curtain must be released when the door is to be opened and may be laced when the door is closed.

A small, inexpensive car, now being manufactured in Germany, is of particular interest because the power plant is placed at the rear, with the radiator at the back end of the car instead of the front. The car as it stands, inasmuch as it has a one-cylinder engine, is not at all suitable for this country, but at least the position of the engine is worth noting. The crankshaft is parallel to the rear axle, which is driven by chain from the transmission. It is possible that at some future date cars with rear engines will become popular, not only because heat and noise are relegated to the rear, where they are last objectionable, but also because it permits the mounting of a vehicle which is more typical of a body in motion. Raindrops, fish, birds and even aeroplane wings are broad in front, tapering to the rear.

Possibilities of Change

The more the matter is analyzed the more it appears that a car with the engine in the rear can be made very attractive. There is still another reason for considering the rear engine location: Theoretically, one of the most perfect engines imaginable, from a smooth-running, vibrationless standpoint, is an eight with opposed cylinders, that is two fours, 180 degrees apart. Considerations of width make such an engine impossible under a front hood, but it may turn out that an engine of this type, placed at the rear with a vertical or nearly vertical crankshaft and the plane through the cylinders, running from front to rear, might be a future solution of the problem.

George McLaughlin, a garage man in Bangor, Maine, has built this automobile, which is equally suitable for use in the water or on land, and especially when the road is covered with mud, sand or snow which makes traction difficult. It is equipped with a seventy horsepower aeroplane engine and will do sixty miles per hour. It has airtight pontoons on both sides under the running boards to support it in the water, the top is constructed of water-proofed canvas, sandwiched between two layers of wood.

Steering Gear

It is steered by the front wheels on both land and water, carries five passengers and, of course, requires neither clutch, transmission, nor rear axle drive mechanism.

Several successful flights have recently been made in an aeroplane equipped with an engine having no crankshaft, connecting-rods or cam gears. In other respects, however, the engine is a conventional air-cooled radial engine with four cylinders. As shown, a large two-lobed cam takes the place of the crankshaft. A roller bearing mounted on the "wristpin" of each piston is equipped with a substantial outer race which bears against the cam. Two rods connect each two pistons, thus holding the piston rollers in close contact with the cam. Since the cam has two lobes, each piston moves in and out once in every half revolution of the crankshaft, and each piston makes four strokes for each revolution of the crankshaft, whereas, in the ordinary engine, four strokes require two crankshaft revolutions. The result is that for a given speed of crankshaft revolution this engine develops approximately double the power of the usual engine.

Perfect Balance

Furthermore, since the crankshaft makes one revolution for every four strokes, the cams may be located directly on it—a half-time camshaft is not required. Since the shape of the cam is absolutely symmetrical, opposite pistons move in and out at exactly the same rate and therefore opposite pistons are in perfect balance, which means that the whole engine is in perfect balance.

The engine has a bore of 5¾ inches, a stroke of 4.5 inches, piston displacement of 447 cu. inches, a compression ratio of 5.2, and develops 150 horsepower at 1,200 revolutions per minute, yet it weighs only 360 pounds complete with a propeller hub, and will cost, it is said, less than a small automobile. Weight might be even less were the engine not designed for long service.

While it is not likely that this engine will prove suitable for automobiles, it is especially applicable to airplanes, not only because of its apparent simplicity but also because of a high horsepower output with a very low and advantageous propellor speed. The engine is the invention of Harold Caminez, formerly in charge of the Engine Design Section, U.S. Army Air Service, McCook Field, Dayton, Ohio, and it is manufactured by the Fairchild Aviation Corp., New York, a company which operates numerous airplanes used in passenger-carrying service and in aerial survey and photographic work.

Closed Car Sales Show Big Increase

In May seventy-nine per cent of all cars sold by General Motors were closed cars, compared with fifty-nine per cent in May, 1925, forty-one per cent in 1924, thirty-eight per cent in 1923 and nineteen per cent in 1922. This comparison includes Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick and Cadillac. As these lines of cars cover virually all price classes, carrying out General Motors policy to build a car for every purse and purpose, the figures may be taken as representative of the trend of the industry to closed cars.

HIGH QUALITY NOT ALWAYS HIGH PRICE

Standardization and Mass Production May Give Lower Cost to Best Production

In the earlier days of the motor car industry the higher price usually denoted the better quality. A purchaser of the earlier cars knew quality and naturally the price would be in accordance with what was paid for. Today, the motor car buyer becomes a purchaser assuming that the higher priced car is of better quality, but they do not know it.

Standardized manufacturing with the great production that is enforced today probably gives the lower priced article the highest quality of all. This is particularly true in the case of the Ford Motor Company of Canada's products, and the extent to which these products are distributed today is proof of the fact. To bear this matter out further. At the International Auto Engineers Conference in Paris last year a comparison of materials used in every make of automobile was analyzed and passed on by this board.

Took First Place

The ranking of the Ford Motor Company product took first place before all others of both European and American manufacture. The Franklin took second and the Lincoln took third. Therefore this quality feature should be born in mind by the prospective purchaser.

In the old days people knew what goods were. Many who are living today carry pictures in their minds of their mother's shopping. Mother was not at the mercy of any clerk for her knowledge of textiles. She drew the fabric through her fingers, tested its weave, and then she knew the quality of the goods and what the price ought to be. That is what is meant by "buying." No one "sold" the old folks; they bought.

It was the same on the other side of the house. The menfolks knew the things pertaining to their world. In wood and metal, horses and cattle, land and grains, they had their own knowledge. While there were occasional deceptions, they were usually due to trustfulness, not to ignorance. It is one thing to rely on a man's word because you trust him, and another thing to rely on his word because you have no knowledge that enables you to look into the matter for yourself.

Situation Changed

The old mental conviction remains but the actual situation has changed. The average person is not capable of judging the exact quality and price because specialization has become so predominant and production so great that this specialization of production governs the quality more than any other feature.

Ford prices are low only on account of this production and great purchasing power and that is the reason why so many Ford cars have been purchased this year and the only reason why so many more will be purchased; because the quality feature is so high in the car.

An accurate hydrometer test of the battery cannot be made just after adding water. The engine must be run a short time to allow plate action,

NEW LEAD PIGMENT STOPS IRON RUSTING

Swiss Scientist Announces Interesting Discovery in Connection With Metal Preservation

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The annual loss to the world due to the rusting of iron runs into many millions of dollars and the problem of its prevention is being studied by scientists in all civilized countries. Zinc, tin, nickel, ordinary lead paint and many other things are useful preventives, but they do not last, and have to be reapplied more or less frequently.

Remarkable Discovery

A remarkable discovery is now announced from Switzerland. Dr. A. V. Blom, of Berne, has made a new lead paint which affords complete and permanent protection to iron. This paint is made by melting lead in an electric furnace and blowing through it air and certain reducing gases, so that a dross, or scale, is produced which consists of colloidal, or extremely finely divided, lead dispersed in yellow lead oxide. When it is powdered and mixed with a specially prepared linseed oil and applied to an iron surface, very minute particles of lead separate out and gradually penetrate into the surface of the iron.

The presence of the lead in the treated iron has been proved by photo micrographs and by chemical analysis. Iron objects painted with this new pigment have not shown any signs of rusting after prolonged exposure, or after being heated in steam.

Bradford has the largest number of cars per capita of any place in England. One out of every fifty-seven persons in the textile town owns a car, and one family in nine has either a car or a motorcycle. Liverpool has the least number of cars, the ratio being one to every 134 of its inhabitants.

MOTOR TRANSPORT IS NATIONAL SAFEGUARD

Automotive Vehicles Enabled British to Successfully Handle General Strike

The British strike and its results has been a triumph of the first magnitude for motor transport and demonstrated that the small fleet owner is a national asset.

The irony of this triumph lies in the fact that the British Government had to seek salvation from the very industry it had just proposed to load with additional taxation burdens. British opinion has it that the taxes were designed to cripple the truck to the advantage of a competitive industry that has proved itself more vulnerable to strike disturbances than the more flexible conveyance.

Time before and time again the truck has shown and will continue to show itself as a national safeguard. If any event ever contained a lesson the late British strike certainly did.—Commercial Car Journal, June 15, 1926.

When a rattle is heard, especially under the car, investigate it. It may be a part coming loose which will disable the car or cause an accident. Neglect is both dangerous and expensive.

THERE IS NO SATURATION POINT FOR HONEST VALUE

Build a product that the world needs, better than the world expects, and mounting sales will answer those who are constantly predicting a saturated market.

During the first six months of this year, for instance, Dodge Brothers (Canada) Limited, sold and delivered to customers 79% more motor cars and trucks, than for the same period during 1925. This gain over the first six months of the previous year advances Dodge Brothers (Canada) Limited to an enviable position in the Industry.

For the three weeks ending July 17th, 89% more motor cars and trucks were delivered to customers, than during the same period last year. This increase is impressive evidence that Dodge Brothers great sales gain is continuing through the quiet weeks of mid-summer.

There may be a saturation point for mediocrity, but honest value will always command a great and ever expanding market.

Efficient Lubrication by Filter and Pressure Feed

Many Problems of Correct Oiling Eliminated by Increased Installation of Strained and Forced Supply—First-Class Lubricant Should Be Used

Proper lubrication is such an indispensable necessity to automobile engine efficiency and fairly long career of usefulness that the majority of motorists today recognize the importance of good lubrication even if they know very little about the various qualities of oils. The type of oil best suited for the particular motor is usually prescribed by the manufacturer or the local dealer.

Motors have recently been so well improved that the consumption of oil is comparatively small, says H. Clifford Brokaw, technical adviser of the New York West Side Y.M.C.A. Automobile School, and the automobile owner can well afford to pay the necessary price to procure the best for his motor. While the highest priced oil is not necessarily the best, high first cost should not influence the purchaser to accept an inferior grade.

The Oil Filter

"One development which has brought motor lubrication systems nearer to perfection is the oil filter," says Mr. Brokaw. "This removes from the oil the metal particles worn off the operating parts, takes out any dirt which may get into the machine or dirt which may collect through careless filling.

"It also cares for the hard particles of carbon which drop from the under side of the piston. These are absorbed in the filter. The dirt can be taken out of the filter, and after a year's use or so the filter can be replaced. This makes it possible for the motorist to travel further on the same amount of oil and at the same time get a better quality of lubricating substance.

Pressure Feed

"Another improvement is the pressure-feed method of engine lubrication. With few exceptions this has now been adopted. Its development has done much to increase the efficiency of the engine. To develop its greatest usefulness the engine must be run at a high rate of speed. When this is done the pressure on the bearings becomes great enough to force out the film of oil and allow the metal parts to come in direct contact with each other.

"Under forced lubrication there is a pressure of approximately twenty-five to thirty pounds which is maintained on the oil in the bearings. This pressure aids the natural viscosity of the oil to hold the bearing surfaces apart. As long as these surfaces are kept apart no wear can occur. It permits a car so equipped to be driven at a comparatively high rate of speed for a long period of time without undue wear on the motor.

"When it comes to chassis lubrication, the one-shot system is a comparatively recent development that has met with some success. In this system the driver can push down on a plunger and force oil to the main part of the chassis which needs lubricating.

Pressure Gun

"One of the most approved methods consists of shooting grease into the various fittings with a pressure gun. This represents an improvement over the method of putting grease into cups. Another system requires the owner to keep oil cups filled with oil, which is supposed to be an improvement over the grease cups, yet many maintain that grease is preferable to oil as a lubricant for the chassis parts.

"Another improvement is in the transmission gear housing and rear axle housing, where the tendency now is to make the filling point about one-third of the height of the housing instead of at the top. Formerly the owner opened the top and put in what oil he thought necessary and the tendency usually was to put in too much, with the result that the oil would run out on the brake bands.

"Under the new arrangement it is impossible to fill the case more than one-third full. The consequence is that too much oil cannot be put in and a saving in oil is also effected."

CANADIAN DODGE CO. INCREASE SHIPMENTS

Over Eighty Per Cent More Cars Sold in Last Six Months Than in 1925

Shipments of cars and trucks from the Toronto factory of Dodge Brothers (Canada), Limited, to Canadian points for the first six months of 1926 show an increase of 81% over the same period of last year and a gain of 36% over the entire year of 1925.

Shipments for June, alone, show an increase of 166% over June, 1925.

Figures for truck shipments taken separately show an even more remarkable comparison with last year. The increase for the month being 210%; for the six-months' period, 170%, and for the six months' period over 1926, 54% greater than for the entire year of 1925.

Official figures showing total production of passenger cars and trucks for the entire Canadian industry for the first five months of 1926 show a gain of 32%. Assuming that this percentage of gain will not be materially increased when June figures are available, Dodge Brothers' progress by comparison is over two and one-half times as great as that of the industry as a whole.

Business men who are accustomed to reading motor industry figures as a barometer of general business conditions will find good reason for optimism in the increased absorption of motor cars and trucks by the Canadian public.

Chrysler Alone Offers Standardized Quality

An important new principal, assuring unsurpassed Chrysler performance to the buyer of any Chrysler car

Walter P. Chrysler's principle of standardized quality manufacture is revolutionizing the buying of fine cars today.

For, at one step, it eliminates "purchaser's risk" . . . . ends the buyer's doubts and fears as to quality . . . . makes possible the purchase of either the lowest-priced or the highest-priced Chrysler with positive knowledge that the quality is equally assured and the value is supreme in its class.

Leading manufacturers have been striving for years to achieve this absolute evenness of quality.

An Unique Achievement

But Chrysler alone has achieved it . . . translated it into fact by an extraordinarily complete coordination of engineering and manufacturing resources. Chrysler standardization of quality goes back to the sources of raw material; it governs the very minutest operation; it makes certain that every unit is produced with the finest precision standards under the most rigid inspection; it even moulds the manufacture of accessories.

Of course, Chrysler models to meet the four great quality markets differ in price, in size of chassis, in richness of appointments, in speed and power—the model numbers representing miles per hour—but all are basically the same in rigid adherence to the same law of quality.

Advantages for the Buyer

Obviously, cars bearing one name . . . . built by one organization . . . . under one all-embracing system of standardized quality manufacture . . . . must be essentially fine to a degree beyond comparison with other cars made under ordinary methods.

This most important of Chrysler advantages insures the superior and uniform quality which is the foundation of superior performance, dependability, comfort, economy and long life in every Chrysler.

That each Chrysler, because of standardized quality, is far ahead of any car near its price . . . in quality of construction and quality of performance . . . . you can easily verify by comparative demonstration. Hundreds of thousands of Chrysler owners know this superiority to be a fact. We invite you to prove these superiorities of standardized quality for yourself.

VETERAN CHEVROLET STARTS A TEST RUN

After 65,000-Mile Rough and Tumble Paper Delivery Life, Car Gets Endurance Trial

Choosing for his purpose a 1925 improved Chevrolet, which has been run almost 65,000 miles, carrying from 800 to 1,200 pounds over rough country roads, C. H. Wells, Inc., the Seattle Chevrolet dealer, recently subjected the car to a 100-hour daylight endurance run.

His intention was to demonstrate to the motoring public that in a low priced car can be obtained the utmost in efficiency, economy of operation and long life.

Starting with hood officially sealed, this sturdy, dependable Chevrolet, which from March 11, 1925, to July 3, 1926, was used to transport newspapers between Spokane, Newport and intervening towns, in all kinds of weather, over numerous stretches of extremely rough roads, ran without missing a single day the 100 hour test, proving that it was as dependable as ever.

The endurance car is owned by Ralph W. Clearwaters, who certifies in the sixteen months it has been in operation his total costs for repairs and service have been $38.90. The The original set of tires carried the car 30,000 miles.

"As a rule in demonstrations of this character," said James Whitelaw, assistant manager of the Seattle dealer organization, "A stock car, virtually new, and just 'well broken in' and 'tuned up' for the feat required, has been used. We selected this car, the average gasoline consumption of which during its life, according to the owner, has averaged twenty-five miles to the gallon, for the reason that we would prove the wonderful value of a low priced, high quality car."

Mile Concrete Testing Track on Factory Roof

One of the largest automobile factories in Europe is at Tourin, Italy. The plant is so constructed that it is possible to make a continuous trip through it in a car. One feature is a banked mile testing track wide enough for eight cars to travel abreast built of concrete on the roof of the main building. It is five stories from the ground and is reached by a series of winding ramps. This enables a motorist to enter from the street and keep going.

Window Lifter Rattles

Annoying rattles are often caused by window lifters in the doors. This can be stopped by tightening the handles or by putting some packing behind the metal plate which conceals the shaft of the window lifter.

SLEEVE VALVE UNIT SMOOTH AND SPEEDY

Many Reports Show Willys-Knight "70" Possesses Usual Features of Efficiency

Owner records of performance which are coming in to the various branches of Willys-Overland Sales Co., Limited, indicate that the new Willys-Knight "70" is revealing rather unusual speed ability in all sections of the country, according to a statement given out by the local representative after a talk with one of the traveling engineers for the manufacturing company.

The coach model has demonstrated its ability to travel better than seventy miles an hour in nearly every part of the country.

Owners report that it is quite the ordinary thing to average forty miles an hour over trips up to 400 to 450 miles in a day, which means that much of the driving is done well over the sixty miles an hour mark.

Canadian-Built Car

In this respect, the Canadian-built Willys-Knight is the counterpart of the European Knight motored cars which have set and held many of the most important Continental speed records for stock cars.

According to the local representative, the construction of the Knight sleeve-valve motor adapts it particularly well for high speed performance.

"The action of the sleeves in itself is proof against the usual feeling of severe motor strain under long sustained high speed," he says. "Many drivers do not feel that they want to keep the motor of their car turning over at such a high rate, because they do not like the sound of the engine. The Willys-Knight owner never has this feeling, for at high speeds as well as at moderate speeds the power plant operates with convincing smoothness and silence.

Operation of Valves

"The operation of the valve mechanism is through two connecting rods in each cylinder, each one lifting and lowering a sleeve and the two sleeves sliding by each other for an inch to open and close the intake and exhaust ports. The action of these connecting rods is continuous and they carry very little load. This load is not increased by high speed operation. Smoothness then becomes a matter of proper lubrication and proper design of the bearing surfaces to stand up under the speed.

"The Willys-Knight "70" motor is built for high speed running.

"The action of the sleeves completely seals the compression chamber at the end of each stroke so that all of the power is held inside the cylinders at all times.

TELLS THE STORY OF A FAMOUS SLOGAN

From Fundamental Function of Oil Was Derived Veedol's Motto, "The Film of Protection"

By A. W. SULLIVAN
Of the Tide Water Oil Company

Two years ago the executives of the Tide Water Oil Company, refiners of the famous Veedol Motor Oil, made a thorough study of all the important advertising in the lubricating oil field. What struck us most was the fact that none was outstanding for the excellence of its appeal to the motorist. By that, we mean that none had succeeded in crystallizing the story of lubrication into a message suitable to the average person, easily remembered and technically sound.

We made many trips to the refinery, observed all the operations of the enormous plant. We spent hours in the laboratories. We cross-examined the fine body of Tide Water technologists. We made copious notes, but all the time we were looking to the sky for a sudden revelation and hoped the lightning would hit us with a sudden stroke of genius. But as often happens, the lightning machine was out of order, so we finally came out of the clouds, set our feet on solid ground, and started to dig right at the bottom of the problem.

We asked: "What is the function of lubricating oil?"

The answer was: "To lubricate."

"What does an oil do when it lubricates?"

"It works in between the whirling, sliding surfaces in an automobile engine, or any other piece of machinery, and by sheer strength does two things—

1—It holds those whirling sliding surfaces apart, and

2—Because of its slipperiness it permits them to slide or rotate freely.

That, then is the important function of a lubricating oil.

At the instant of explosion there may be a temperature as high as 3,000 degrees. Think of a lubricating oil having to stand up under such unimaginable heat!

Then, too, in order to hold the bearings apart the oil must sometimes resist a pressure of many tons in the main bearing.

As we considered these matters the sudden realization came that it was not the quantity of oil that gives a motor protection, but a tissue thin film of that oil, a film thinner than this paper.

The Tide Water technologists proved to us that at any given instant only a few drops of oil were doing the whole lubricating job in a motor. Therefore it was not oil but oil film that had to be reckened with in lubricating.

At the instant of explosion Veedol holds full compression; in the bearings Veedol defies pressure. Veedol therefore formed a film of protection in the motor—a film which because of the character and high quality was "thin as tissue, smooth as silk, tough as steel."

Thus, from the very fundamental function of Veedol itself was the famous slogan born, "The film of protection—thin as tissue, smooth as silk, tough as steel."

British Autos Increase

The British Ministry of Transports' returns on the approximate number of motor licenses cufrent in Great Britain on May 31, show that the chief increase in motor cars during the last nine months has been under the heading of "private cars," the total of which is now two and a half times as high as in 1921 and nearly six times as high as in 1913. Although the totals do not, as a rule, reach their maximum until August of each year, the figures already show an increase of approximately five per cent over those of 1925.

CHRYSLER REFERS TO FORTHCOMING MOTOR

Famous Car Manufacturer Gives Opinion of Buying Trend and Company's Plans

That there is a distinct trend in motor car buying that promises rather spectacular developments in the industry is the opinion of Walter P. Chrysler, motor car manufacturer.

According to Chrysler, people demand something more than simply transportation at a price; they demand in their cars all the excellencies, proportionately, that a higher price commands.

A New Trend

"The purchasing of motor cars has taken a distinct trend recently that is of the greatest importance to the industry," Chrysler said in an interview in Detroit.

"People are no longer satisfied, merely with transportation at a price. They are insisting on the same things they find in higher priced cars, in due proportions to the investment, of course, and they are going to have these demands satisfied.

"They are most insistent on full-sized bodies which give all the occupants ample room. They insist not only on full-sized bodies, but on ease of riding as well—real comfort. And, of course, with this they want the best of performance with real economy of operation.

"All of these things can be built into a four-cylinder car at a reasonably low price.

More for Dollar

"The industry has developed today until it is entirely possible to give more per dollar than would have been imagined as short a time as two years ago.

"It is to that end that we are shaping our manufacturing plans and we are very confident that the car of this type which we produce will enjoy a conspicuous success from the start."

Chrysler did not amplify his statement with any details of the new car which he is apparently about to produce.

It is the general opinion in the industry, however, that the new car will embody many of the ideas which have been exploited in other Chrysler models, and which have kept this car continually in the foreground among fine cars since the first Chrysler was produced two and a half years ago.

Child Motor Victims

The automobile is as much a menace to child life as scarlet fever and whooping cough combined, according to statistics compiled by a New York City life insurance company. Deaths from automobile accidents have increased fifty per cent since 1920, two-fifths of the deaths being among children under fifteen years. Gains have been made in reducing the death rates from measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria and whooping cough—the four chief children's diseases. A low record was also established last year for diseases associated with maternity.

MOTORS AIDED RACE AROUND THE WORLD

Recent Encircling of Globe by Two Americans was Helped by Automobiles

Automobiles played an important part in the successful race of Edward S. Evans and Linton Wells around the world for a new time record. Both the actual start and the finish were in motor cars and automobiles were used in France, Germany and Japan. At every point all the way around the world it was a Packard car which was used by the globe-encircling racers.

Speedy Jump Off

That a few minutes time should be gained at the start, Evans and Wells waited for some time after the Aquitania, which was to carry them to France, had left her dock. They then raced from Park Row in New York to the Battery and boarded a revenue cutter which carried them to Ambrose Light where they clambered up the side of the liner. An airplane was to have carried them from Cherbourg to Paris but it crashed a short time before their ship docked and a Packard was pressed into service for a fast run between these two points. At many other points a Packard saved them many precious minutes.

Packard to Rescue

Technically the finish of the world race had to be at the point from whence they departed, the curb in front of the Pulitzer building on Park Row in New York. After their flight in army airplanes across the United States they landed at Mitchel Field, Long Island. Their plane had no more than come to rest before a Packard Six phaeton which had been waiting for them dashed up alongside on the landing field and a second or two latter it was on its way with a rush, surrounded by a squad of police on motor cycles. When the Packard pulled up at the Pulitzer building curb it was found by official watches that the actual elapsed time from the moment they set out was twenty-eight days, fourteen hours, thirty-six minutes and five seconds.

CAREFULLY MACHINE CYLINDER CHAMBER

Paige Factory Treatment of Combustion Unit Prevents Deposits of Carbon

DETROIT, Aug. 7.—Automobile engines are like men in one important characteristic—their success is largely determined by what's inside their heads.

That's just why the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company employs a battery of costly automatic machines to insure that what's inside the cylinder heads of Paige engines shall be just exactly right.

It is a common practice in auto manufacture to leave the inside of the combustion chambers in the cylinder head just as they come from the foundry. In other words, the surface of the casting is not altered.

Paige Practice

Paige practice, on the other hand, is to machine the combustion chamber carefully over all surfaces—the side walls and the top—the operation being held within a variation of one-thousandth of an inch.

Smoothness of these surfaces is a desirable feature, but the main object of the machine operation is not to finish the surface so much as to insure that the chambers shall be of exactly the desired volume. The new Paige engines were designed to operate with a certain compression ratio. If the volume of the combustion chambers varied, different engines would have different compression ratios; whether too high or too low, these engines would fall short of the ideal operating conditions and their performance would not be up to the high standards set for them.

Close Limits

When the variation is held to the close limits maintained in Paige engines, then proper operation and maximum efficiency are assured.

This machine operation, in addition, has other advantages to the owner, as compared with the rough surface of a plain casting. The Paige combustion chamber surface is so smooth that it greatly retards the forming of carbon deposits, and when carbon does accumulate it is much easier to remove.

Furthermore, the uniformity in thickness of the cylinder head means better cooling, so that the engine may be maintained at its most efficient temperature.

British Motorists Are Heavily Taxed

Motorists in Great Britain are the most heavily taxed in the world. Allowing for different methods of taxation in various countries, the result for a ten-horsepower car works out at $50 for Great Britain, $15.50 for France, $15 for the United States and Italy, and $10.50 for Canada.

The Toe-In of Tires

Toe-in is the difference in measurements between the front and "pitch" or "camber," is the difference between the distance across the tops of the wheels and the distance across the bottoms. Wheels on which the tires toe-in excessively have the effect of rubbing the tire tread against the road, greatly reducing its life. When the toe-in does not agree with manufacturer's recommendations, it may be easily adjusted by adjusting the tie rod or distance rod.

NEWSPAPERMAN IS AMAZED AT WEST

Mr. D. M. McCulloch, of Glasgow Weekly Record, Was Sent to Get Impressions

MONTREAL, August 7.—Recording his "absolute amazement" at the possibilities for the worker that exist in Canada, Mr. David M. McCulloch, editor of The Glasgow Weekly Record, is back in Montreal from a two-month trip out west to Vancouver and return with an abounding faith in the chances that Canada offers to the man who is not afraid to give his time, his energies and his abilities in order to attain success.

There is, he stated, a good deal of mental confusion in Scotland as to possibilities for the Scottish emigrant to the Dominion. Men hear stories of failure over here which, with exaggerated accounts of the duration and severity of the Winter, combine to render them doubtful of success. In order to give the artizan and farm laborer class of Scotland an unbiassed story of conditions in this country, his paper had commissioned him to travel through the Dominion and gather personal impressions from Scottish settlers in the cities and on the land.

Mr. McCulloch said he had interviewed more than 200 representative Scotch settlers here and their replies to his inquiries were almost uniformly optimistic. What had specially impressed him had been the astonishing health of their children. So far as the primary schools were concerned, he considered the brand of education offered to the rising generation was as good as anything to be got in Scotland and it had this advantage over the Old Country, that there was absolutely not a trace of class distinctions. In the cities, though he had looked for them, he had been unable to discovar anything remotely resembling the slums of the Scottish and Old World cities.

The Canadian Winter, Mr. McCulloch found, presented no terrors to the Scottish settler. Undoubtedly much more severe than that of Scotland, he had ascertained that the farm laborar of foresight hired himself out for that period for perhaps only board and lodging, thus keeping his bankroll, acquired during the rest of the year, intact.

Mr. McCulloch intends to spread his newly acquired information of Canada in a series of articles for his paper.

RARE COLUMBUS FINDS REPORTED

NEW ORLEANS, August 7.—A full account of Christopher Columbus' last voyage, a roster of his crews, their wages and all incidents of the trip were said, by Dr. Rudolph Schuler, archaeologist, to be contained in manuscripts brought here by him from Central America. Dr. Schuler, who for the last twenty-seven years, has conducted archaeological and linguistic research in Central America, came here with the view of having Tulane University publish the results of his years of labor.

The natural scientist said he unearthed unpublished accounts of Columbus' last voyage to America, together with a history of the survivors of the expedition, while delving into ancient Central American and Spanish archives.

In addition to the documents relating to Columbus' successes and vicissitudes, Dr. Schuler also seeks the local university's support in publication of a treatise on Central American Indians and a work on ancient Maya dialect. He also has prepared a treatise on the vanishing aboriginal language of the Republic of San Salvador.

Before engaging in Latin-American research, Dr. Schuler spent many years in archaeological work in Greece and Rome. He carries four foreign university degrees, speaks seven major languages and many native tongues. He formerly was professor of ethnology and linguistics at the University of Mexico.

House Flies Are One Of the Three Causes Of Many Diseases

The three F's of ill health are flies, food and fingers. They are the chief means by which many diseases are carried from person to person. The fingers carry dirt and germs to eyes, nose and mouth. Food easily becomes contaminated from exposure or handling. And flies are loaded with filth and disease germs.

The house fly should be destroyed. It is a filthy creature. It breeds in filth; manure, garbage, decaying animal matter, etc. Its body is covered with hairs to which filth and disease germs cling to be dropped in food, etc.

Destroy the breeding places of flies. Keep garbage cans covered. Clean up decaying rubbish. Screen all doors and windows and make sure that the screens are really fly proof and are kept closed. Kill flies. A single pair of flies can produce billions of flies in a Summer.

"The Black Pirate" Shows At Dominion on Monday

Douglas Fairbanks, the Screen's Most Active Romantic Hero, Produces in Natural Color Vivid Picture of Morgan, the Freebooter

In presenting "The Black Pirate," which is coming to the Dominion Theatre tomorrow, Douglas Fairbanks is up to one of his pioneering tricks again. The film is in natural color and a vast improvement, we are told, over past efforts at presenting color. "Doug" has picked out tones which are calculated to rest the eye—principally browns and greens and their complements. And all the color is selected in accordance with its dramatic value. Four months of experimental work was done along this line before a crank was turned on production.

Original Story

The story is an original from the facile pen of Mr. Elton Thomas. All the "yo-hoes" and "avasts" of 17th century piracy are in "The Black Pirate," along with everything that any pirate ever did, from burying treasure to walking the plank. Without being specific, Fairbanks chose the Southern Seas as his locale, thus giving his adventure plenty of sea room.

Mr. Fairbanks opens this picture, we are told, where most of them end—with the freebooters blowing up a galleon along with the passengers, cargo and crew. After this placid incident things get exciting and the first thing we know the star is the black pirate, rowing about and capturing ships single-handed and all that. All told, two ships are blown up, and one is sunk under fire.

Walks the Plank

The hero is made to walk the plank, and just how he extricated himself from that unhappy predicament after his hands have been tied behind his back is quite a story in itself.

The cast for the picture is of very compact dimensions. There are only two women in the piece—Billie Dove and Tempe Pigott, the latter in the role of maid to the heroine. Other featured players include Anders Randolf as pirate captain; Sam De Grasse as the villainous pirate, and Donald Crisp as a genial kind of pirate. In support of these are some 500 of as wicked-looking freebooters as ever stepped out of a storybook.

MUSICAL COMEDY BY REG. HINCKS PLAYERS

Popular Troup Opens Season Tomorrow, Producing "The Belle of New York"

For the opening week of the season, Reg. Hincks is presenting "The Belle of New York," that wonderful old musical comedy with all its lovely lilting tunes. Everyone will want to hear once more the strains of "The Belle of New York," "When We Are Married," "They Always Follow Me," and "Teach Me How to Kiss," and the fun of "I'm a Philosopher." The cast this season has been enlarged and strengthened. We have of course Ernie Petch in one of his excellent characterizations. Then Viv. Combs and Harold Bechtel in more funny antics. All the other old favorites are back with the addition of Roberta Balcom, who is well known here for her excellent dancing. Eleanor Duncalfe, another excellent dancer, late of Los Angeles and a gold medalist Charleston artist, and Gerald Newman, who will take the tenor roles.

Bartholmess Pictures

In "Just Suppose," the new Richard Barthelmess picture which will be the screen feature at the Playhouse this week, Richard Barthelmess, in a role of a royal prince, comes to America on a diplomatic tour.

The sets showing the interior of the Royal Palace in Central Europe are palatial and magnificent. For the exterior of the palace Barthelmess was fortunate enough to secure the privilege of using the estate of Joseph E. Widener, at Elkins Park, near Philadelphia, Pa., the architecture of which is based upon the famous palace of Louis XII at Versailles, France.

When the Prince is supposed to mingle with high society in the picture he actually does mingle with the elite of Southampton, L. I., which is one of the very smartest Summer colonies in the East. And when the Prince plays polo at a private polo field, as he would, he actually does play at the private field of Thomas Hitchcock of Westbury, L. I., where Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., of international polo fame practices.

Retreat From Mons

Good progress is being made, it is stated, with "The Retreat From Mons," which a British firm is making. Recently a number of English troops were given permission by the War Office to appear as Uhlans and the Prussian Guard in a necessary scene. This was taken near Folkestone and very satisfactory results were obtained. The picture is being made by the people responsible for the Ypres film.

GIGANTIC SUBMARINE SEQUENCE PLANNED

Divers Prepare for Filming at Bahamas of Jules Verne Thrilling Under-Sea Story

J. E. Williamson, head of the Williamson Undersea Studios of Nassau, Bahama Island; Charles Stalling, production manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and J. Richer, cameraman left New York recently on the Munson line for Nassau, along with a score of deep sea divers to start construction of the mammoth sets to be used in "The Mysterious Island," a story are enacted by Lionel Barrymore, Sally O'Neil, Conrad Nagel and Roy D'Arcy. The story is centred about a fugitive Russian who has a grievance against his native country and sails away from home and lives on a mysterious island. There he constructs a gigantic submarine, hundreds of years before that vessel came into use. He uses it as an instrument of torture and instills fear into the hearts of the Russian sea fighters, who believe the submarine to be a mammoth sea monster of the octopus variety.

One of the most thrilling sequences in the picture features a fight between 200 divers and six octopuses, and it is said it will be one of the most novel and thrilling spectacles ever seen on the screen. These monsters will all be constructed by the divers who set sail with Williamson.

When the preliminary work of building the enormous sets is completed, Mr. Tourneur and his company will set said for the Bahamas, where the exterior scenes will be filmed.

The central role, King Nemo, will be played by Mr. Barrymore and Sally O'Neil will be seen as the waif whom he rescues and brings up to womanhood on the mysterious island.

Influence of Movies

What is the youth of the world thinking today? What are his ideals, ambitions, heroes, religion? To these and many similar questions the Y.M.C.A. has been seeking an answer from youth all over the world. The influence of the cinema is indicated by the list of heroes given by younger boys. Boys who gave Henry II. Nelson and Wellington as favorite heroes of the past gave as their present-day heroes Betty Balfour, Buster Keaton and Douglas Fairbanks.

ROMANCE OF SECRET SERVICE FEATURED

Realistic Air Raid on New York Depicted in "Great Deception," Showing at Capitol Tomorrow

"The Great Deception," Robert Kane's new picture for First National, which comes on Monday to the Capitol Theatre here, is a romance of the British Secret Service during the World War. George Gibbs wrote the story under the title of "The Yellow Dove."

In the photoplay Ben Lyon appears as a member of the British Secret Service, matching wits with Basil Rathbone, who represents the head of the German espionage bureau operating in London.

Aileen Pringle appears as an American girl visiting in London at the outbreak of the war. Both Lyon and Rathbone develop an absorbing interest in the pretty girl.

Other members of a particularly fine cast are Sam Hardy, Charlotte Walker, Amelia Summerville, Hubert Wilke and Lucian Prival. Howard Higgin directed.

In the course of the story Ben Lyon does a good deal of dangerous stunt flying. Miss Pringle is in the plane with him at the time.

For one of the most important scenes in "The Deception" a sham air raid was made on New York city. The army base there co-operated by repelling the "raid" with anti-aircraft guns and giant searchlights while the cameras photographed the event.

BARTHELMESS MAKES WAY FOR NEW FIND

Gardner James, Erstwhile Coal Heaver, Quickly Arrives at Film Stardom

"From Stokehole to Stardom," reads like a Horatio Alger novel. But yesterday Gardner James was an unheard-of, penniless motion picture player—today the most promising "find," with stardom within his grasp. Less than fourteen months ago this young Irish lad arrived in the Los Angeles harbor aboard a tramp steamer, broke and friendless. Recently he signed a five-year contract to appear exclusively under the direction of Inspiration Pictures.

James attracted the attention of the press and public three months ago when J. Stuart Blackton's "Hell Bent Fer Heaven" was released. J. Boyce Smith, general manager of Inspiration Pictures, upon witnessing a preview, immediately signed him for an important role in "The Amateur Gentleman." Before the youthful actor had worked two days he was offered the long-term contract. He began his theatrical career as a child actor, appearing in many New York productions under contract to the Shuberts.

Sails as Coal-Heaver

When James grew into manhood, the lure of the sea took possession of him. Around the world twice, working from cabin-boy, deck-hand, to third mate, at twenty-three he returned to New York broke. He desired to continue in theatricals, not the stage this time, but the screen. He signed on as a coal-heaver aboard the first vessel bound for Los Angeles. Ten days after he came to Hollywood, J. Stuart Blackton gave James his first picture role, as Lord Rollo in "The Happy Warrior." Blackton was so impressed with James' personality that he later gave him the tell-take part in "Hell Bent Fer Heaven."

Richard Barthelmess will leave Inspiration Pictures upon completion of his next production. James will be groomed to step into his shoes.

Succeeds Gloria Swanson

Though it challenges all credence, dispatches from the Coast aver that also "is being groomed" Esther Ralston to take Gloria Swanson's place on the Famous Players programme, and the inference is that Jesse Lasky is about to launch forth a campaign in which Miss Ralston is all slicked up into a full-fledged Gloria Swanson, trimmings and all.

From the outset it must be admitted that Esther Ralston, with her flaxen hair, sweetness and winsome beauty, has absolutely nothing in common with the flamboyant and unyielding Miss Swanson. In the first place every time Famous Players want a fairy godmother they send for Esther Ralston. When they want a "character" they page Gloria Swanson.

VITAPHONE PREMIERE

Noted Soloists Take Part in Synchronized Presentation of Byron's "Don Juan"

Marian Talley, soprano, and Giovanni Martinelli, tenor, of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Anna Case, soprano; Mischa Elman and Efrem Zimbalist, violinists; Harold Bauer, pianist; the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Henry Hadley's direction, and the Metropolitan Opera House chorus were seen and heard on Thursday night in New York, when the vitaphone, an instrument that synchronizes the showing of motion pictures and the reproduction of sound, was introduced by Warner Brothers and the Vitaphone Corporation. This demonstration was to be a prologue to the first presentation of the picture "Don Juan," based on Byron's poem, with John Barrymore in the title role.

WAR TIME SUCCESS BILLED AT COLISEUM

London and New York Success, "Stop Thief," Presented With Enlarged Cast Monday

This week the Coliseum management is presenting, under Mr. Redmond's directorship, the Percy Hutchinson stage success, "Stop Thief," with a full cast of sixteen players. During the war, "Stop Thief" was running in London and New York simultaneously to record houses. With an enlarged cast and a complete rendition of the original script under the expert direction of Ed. Redmond, Victoria theatregoers will have an opportunity of witnessing this wonderful stage success in its entirety and under the very best conditions.

The story concerns the ups and downs of Jack Doogan, (Geo. O. Olsen) crook and pseudo-detective and his sweetheart Nell (Ruth Hamilton). Nell is employed as maid in the home of Professor Carr (Ed. Redmond) whose daughter, Joan, is shortly to be married. Wedding gifts are all on display, guests assembling. Arrives the detective in the person of Jack Doogan, an inventory is made and the fun commences. The professor, many years previously, had developed cleptomaniac tendencies and this starts a long maze of complications and suspicions involving father, bridegroom, bride and almost every member of the wedding party. The real culprits, Doogan and his sweetheart are, of course, above suspicion. The play reaches a climax in the ultimate arrest of the crooks, but they furnish such a satisfactory excuse for their conduct, that the curtain falls on a wedding scene not of one couple but of three.

In addition to the above mentioned players, the cast includes, amongst others, Violet Taylor as Mrs. Carr, Eileen Allwood as Joan, Beth Allan as Caroline, Gertrude Burton as Madge, daughter of the professor, Jack Cassidy takes the part of James Cluny, Gordon Nelson as Dr. Willoughby, a friend of the family. Frank Allwood, as sergeant of police, who is not above suspicion in this clever farce, finds on presenting his search warrant, that it is merely an inventory of wedding gifts.

'LOST WORLD' APPEARS ON COLUMBIA SCREEN

Conan Doyle's Wonderful Word Picture of Prehistoric Monsters Filmed at Local House

Probably the most unusual love drama ever put on the screen is "The Lost World," which comes to the Columbia Theatre next Monday.

The picture is an adaptation of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel of the same title. He painted a vivid word picture of a lost world in the vast, unexplored regions of the upper Amazon River which time had forgot.

Prehistoric Monsters

There Doyle's band of adventurers found prehistoric monsters that roamed the earth 10,000,000 years ago and battled each other to the death as in the days of old.

Into the heart of this monster-infested district went this party of explorers—three men and a girl. Their mission was to rescue her father, if he still lived, and prove to the world the existence of the prehistoric beasts—the brontosaurus, bigger than ten elephants; the tyrannosaurus, most fearsome creature that ever stalked this earth.

As the modern humans watched, awe-inspired, these monsters gave deadly battle to one another—such battles as never before have been witnessed on a motion picture screen.

Bessie Love, Lewis Stone, Wallace Beery and Lloyd Hughes head the human cast, sharing honors with the prehistoric monsters.

Sousa Says British Guards' Band Best

WASHINGTON, August 7.—John Philip Sousa has consented to assist the War Department in a study of band instrumentation, with a view to improvement in army bands, it has been announced. Mr. Sousa has advised the War Department that of all the bands he has observed in his travels he believes the best instrumentation for military purposes is that of the Guards' Band of Great Britain.

Against "Block" Booking

By a majority of 1,505, members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain and Ireland balloted against the blind booking of films. Mr. W. N. Blake, president of the association, said they were now going to ask the council of the association to confer with the film renters who has been doing the "blind booking" and endeavor to get them to cooperate.

Mistress (engaging new servant)—And how is it, Mary, you always had earache and sore eyes at your last place?

Mary (after pause)—Well, you see, ma'am, the keyholes were rather drafty.

List of Canadians Who Received Invitations to Royal Garden Party—Students From Canada, Now Spending Two Months in England and France, Enjoy Tour of Western Parts of Old Country

By Elizabeth Montizambert

(By Mail.)—The Royal Garden Party was held recently and with the perversity of the English climate the skies were persistently chill and grey while today we are fanning ourselves as a relief from the blazing sunshine. However, no rain fell to dim the brightness of the pulticolored costumes. The scene, only a quarter of an hour after the time set on the Royal command, was extraordinary. Even the large grounds of Buckingham Palace seemed crowded and at first it appeared as if one would never be able to find anyone one knew. Gradually, however, groups began to sort themselves out, and one could note some of the striking or eminent people. One of the most picturesque was the beautiful little Indian princess whose fairy white clinging garments were an excellent background for the magnificent jewels, ropes of emeralds and diamonds and huge pearls she wore. Lady Alexander, whose clothes always make her conspicious wherever she is, had on an embroidered coat of rich, yellow brocade and an eccentric hat with a fanfare of blue feathers. Lady Oxford and Asquith was walking about with her son, dressed in a frock of taffeta in a new shade between bois de rose and raspberry.

All the guests were outshone by the Queen, who moved about chatting with her friends and the strangers who were presented to her, dressed in a lovely cool dress of white, trimmed with cream lace. The pretty Duchess of York was walking with her husband in a charming gown of palest pink chiffon and wearing a wrap of white ermine.

She looked so happy, and so did the Duke, that everyone smiled on them, and I heard one Australian say with conviction: "They will all love her out there." Princess Patricia looked lovely, as usual, in a printed chiffon frock of brown and pink. Among the English guests one came across were the Lady Margaret Boscawen, Sir Herbert and Lady Samuelson, Lord and Lady Charnwood, the Comte and Comtesse de Limur, Lady (Henry) Wilson, Lady Bristol, the Misses Manton and Mr. Paul Nanton, Mrs Donald McInnes, Lady Leucha Warner, Lord and Lady Strafford, Lady Moreton, Lady Bathurst, Miss Bayliss of the Old Vic., Irene Vanbrugh, Lady Mount Stephen, the High Commissioner and Mrs. Larkin, Lady Allwyn, Principal Harrison and all the other members of the party of teachers from New Brunswick. The latter were all entertained by Lady Beaverbrook at dinner at the Hyde Park Hotel and are making the most of their brief stay in London.

I have just met a young Canadian girl who told me that last week she went to Plymouth and joined the Canadian students tour, which is under the auspices of the Overseas Education League, for five days. This group of 230 students is spending two months in England and France. Many of them are getting their first glimpse of this side of the water. On landing at Southhampton on July 1 they went to Salisbury, Winchester, Dorchester, the New Forest and paused to have tea at Poxlease, the beautiful home of the Girl Guides.

At Plymouth the students were the guests of the town for three days, and were scattered everywhere in twos and threes with private families. Everyone was very good to them, and when they left on Monday one heard snatches of conversation about tennis parties and other amusements. From Plymouth they went to Tintagel, Launcester and Buckland Abbey, where they were shown Drakes' Drum and wonderful old documents of interest to Canadians.

A glorious drive across the moors, where the heather was just beginning to come out, brought them to the sea again at Ilfracombe. The following morning the long snake of eleven pale-blue char-a-bancs started out along the coast through Lynton, Lynmouth, Minehead, and then inland to Glastonbury, where they were received by the Mayor and Corporation. After lunch they went to the Abbey and were lucky enough to be shown around by Mr. Bligh Bond, who has done so much of the recent excavations, and the vicar, who told many of the old traditions connected with the place. At Wells the Dean entertained the party to tea in his beautiful garden, and afterwards took them round the cathedral.

Bath, Stratford - Oxford, London, then Antwerp, Brussel, Paris, Normandy, and Brittany, and home again from Cherbourg is what is still in store for the 230 men and girls on the tour. It is the third party of its kind to be brought over during the Summer months. Each year the itinerary has been slightly different, but it has always been arranged to take in as many as possible of the beauties England has to offer, both of nature and cathedrals and historic monuments. Such trips cannot help but make a great impression on young people from a young country, who are coming in contact with the old world for the first time, and they certainly seem to appreciate the opportunity and enjoy it to the full.

Film "Robinson Crusoe"

Mr. M. A. Wetherell, who made the successful British film, "Livingstone," left London for the West Indies recently for the purpose of filming "Robinson Crusoe." He has written the scenario, and will direct the production in addition to playing the title role. It will be produced on the Island of Tobago, and a Carib will play the part of Friday.

Mrs. Carney rushed into her living room.

"Oh, Walter," she cried, as she panted for breath. "I dropped my diamond ring off my finger and I can't find it anywhere."

"It's all right, Olive," said Walter, "I came across it in my trouser's pocket."

POLISH MOVIE FANS MOB THE FAIRBANKS

Patient Soldier Heads 500 Screen-Struck Girls in Crashing Artists' Private Suite.

WARSAW, Aug. 8.—Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, when here, were awakened early one morning to find an officer in full uniform and wearing a long sabre standing in the middle of their salon in the Bristol Hotel. Clad in pajamas, Fairbanks bounced out and demanded the reason for his presence, but received only responses in Polish and, giving up the task of understanding the officer, he plunged back into bed.

Three hours later the movie actor found the soldier still patiently waiting. By this time visitors were crashing the doors of the entire suite and milling through the rooms, and interpreters who were trying to separate 500 stage-struck Polish girls from the Warsaw journalists discovered the soldier had made up his mind to join the Fairbanks Company at any cost. He was still in the apartment when the Fairbanks party, quietly eluding the crowds surrounding the hotel, reached the train for Carlsbad.

At noon a luncheon was given for Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks in the four-century-old Fouquier wine cellar, where they were served exclusively Polish dishes and 1,770 honey wine, the same vintage that was opened on the Fourth of July in honor of the American sesquicentennial.

Both Fairbanks and his wife agreed that Russia was producing several prospective film stars, and said they hoped to employ a director from Moscow. Fairbanks declared the desire for a glimpse of the outside world was likely to result in a big American picture distribution in Russia.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD INCREASES IN CANADA

British Columbia Takes Second Place in Production With 219,227 Ounces for Year 1925

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—Canada is producing more gold than ever. In 1925 the output was 1,735,735 fine ounces, worth $35,880,826. This was an increase of 210,353 fine ounces over 1924 production.

Of platinum, Canada produced in 1925 a total of 8,698 fine ounces, worth $1,028,192. Of other metals in the platinum group palladium, rhodium, iridium, etc., the Dominion's output that year was 8,283 fine ounces, valued at $648,969.

The bulk was mined in Ontario, which province produced 1,461,039 fine ounces. British Columbia was second with 219,227 ounces; the Yukon produced 47,817 ounces; Manitoba 4,424 ounces, and Nova Scotia and Quebec 1,600 ounces apiece.

Of the platinum, 8,692 ounces was derived from Canadian ores treated in British and United States refineries. Practically all of this came from copper-nickel ores in the Sudbury district. Some six ounces was recovered from placer deposits of the Tulameen and Quesnel Rivers of British Columbia. Some platinum recoveries were also made at the Royal Mint at Ottawa and treatment of scrap and old jewelry.

NICHOLAS WAITS FOR NEW REVOLUTION

Russian Grand Duke Is Leader of Anti-Communist Group and Expects Overthrow of Reds

In the Chateau de Choigny, near the quiet little village of Santenay, about an hour's ride southeast of Paris, lives the 69-year-old Grand Duke Nicholas, whom a newly organized group of Russian emigres have acclaimed as the leader of a future peasant revolution against Bolshevism, says the New York Times' correspondent.

Nicholas, uncle of the late Czar and former commander-in-chief of the Russian armies, whose advance into East Prussia enheartened the Allied world in the first year of the war, takes walks and occasional motor rides over the pleasant, rolling countryside, awaiting the time when he and his supporters may have an opportunity of assuming the lead in the reconstruction of Russia.

It is not merely watchful waiting. The Grand Duke is the recipient of a monthly sum estimated to be more than 1,000,000 francs, contributed by Russians scattered abroad to help bring about an entente between the anti-Communists within Russia and the nationalist movement outside. The money is not collected or controlled by any organization. It is a voluntary gift from the emigrees to the Grand Duke, to be used for political purposes by him and his immediate staff.

The Grand Duke and his partizans do not express confident hope of an early downfall of the Communist power. "We must wait and work," they say. Nor do they put forth a detailed programme to be applied in the event of nationalist success. Grand Duke Nicholas has carefully refrained from specific pronouncements, beyond saying that he is no protagonist of any system of government to be imposed from outside Russia.

People Deprived of Liberties

"We must not seek to anticipate the future destinies of Russia," said Nicholas. "We must content ourselves with striving to restore order and legality. It is our people, today deprived of all their liberties, who alone have the right to establish the bases of their existence."

It can scarcely be said, however, that the Grand Duke's supporters refrain from imagining the form that the restoration of order might conceivably take. A few, including some who served in the unsuccessful armies of intervention, still believe that Nicholas should undertake some such exploit as that of Kolchak, Denikin or Yudenitch; should try to enter the country at the head of an army and overthrow the Soviet Government. Others, who regard themselves as moderates, place their hopes in a peasant uprising, to be followed by a dictatorship of the Grand Duke and, later, by a more or less constitutional monarchy.

Policies Internal and External

"The Russian emigration—or, as I prefer to call it, using the Old Testament term, the dispersion—is broadly divided into three main elements," Peter Struve, president of the recent Russian Congress in Paris, explained to the correspondent.

"There are what might be called the doctrinaire monarchists, or legitimists, who have definite and fixed ideas on the restoration of the legitimate monarchy according to the fundamental law of Russia. These are the partisans of the Grand Duke Cyril, and their interpretation of the law is that Cyril is the legitimate successor to the throne.

"Then there are those whom one might classify as doctrinaire republicans. They include the democratic republicans or bourgeois who follow M. Paul Milliukoff and the Socialist Democrats of the Kerensky faction—the late Social Revolutionary Party. Both these elements are doctrinaire, one espousing the legitimate monarchy, the other a republic.

Moderate Element

"Third, there are the moderate elements, without doctrinaire ideas or preconceptions as to the political form that the re-establishment of the Russian nation may take. There are among these groups some who, by temperament and conviction, are monarchists. There are some quite without prejudices who likewise favor the monarchical form of Government.

"This group might be said to represent the national and patriotic movement—patriotism without rigid political doctrine. It is precisely those of this group who furnished the composition of the recent Russian congress in Paris and named the Grand Duke Nicholas leader of the anti-Communist movement. In the minds of the organizers of the congress, the question of setting up a monarchy or a republic was eliminated in advance. I should like to stress this point, since the congress has been misrepresented by some as a monarchical movement.

"The recognition of the Grand Duke as leader was not a proclamation of a monarch or a pretender to the throne; it was in no sense a monarchical pronunciamento. In my opinion this is an essential point. In the legal view the Grand Duke has no chance of being recognized as the legitimate successor to the throne."

Potential Pretenders

"Do you think he might become a pretender later on?" M. Struve was asked.

The reply was: "That would be pure speculation."

"There were in the Congress supporters of the Grand Duke who expressed the hope that the present regime might fall and that he might become Czar," M. Struve was reminded.

"The important point is not that the Grand Duke is a member of the Romanoff family, but that he led the army in the war and is popular with his former soldiers. There is a certain analogy in the case of President Hinderburg, another military leader who became a political leader.

"Moreover, the Congress definitely put aside any idea of restoring the agrarian regime prevailing before the revolution. It declared unequivocally that the results of the agrarian revolution should be accepted as the basis of the social structure of the Russia of the future. In this respect my expectations were exceeded. It also declared that the independence of the States once a part of the Russian Empire should be accepted as a point of departure for all future relations between Russia and her neighbors. The Congress expressed itself in such a way as to eliminate all suspicion of a reactionary attitude.

Primitive Conditions

The Soviet system, considered sociologically, represents a reaction toward primitive conditions. The French Revolution was one of progress, whereas the Russian Revolution of 1917 destroyed the gains of bourgeois culture in the country. We must now make a bourgeois revolution against reactionary communism."

General Alexander Loukomsky, a member of the Grand Duke's staff, was also questioned.

"The Congress," he said, "did not set up a permanent organization, but merely named a financial committee to dispose of the obligations of the assemblage. It then issued its message to the Russian people and adjourned. Thereupon the two chiefs groups met to see what could be done. The one favoring the linking of the nationalist movement unqualifiedly with the Grand Duke's projects finally formed the Russian Patriotic Society, with Professor Jean Alexinsky at its head. The one that held it inadvisable at present to place the movement under the Grand Duke called itself the Society for Russian Union. The two factions reached an agreement upon all points except one—the question of the formation of a permanent organization.

Russian Dictatorship

"My own opinion is that after the fall of Bolshevism it will be necessary for Russia to have for several years a strong central power of a dictatorial nature, capable of establishing order, peace and individual liberty. It will be only after the establishment of peace that we can pass to normal life and the definite organization of the State according to the desire of the people."

In response to questions as to what hopes the Grand Duke and the nationalists entertain for a political reversal, the General said:

"We can no longer hope that European powers will take, in the near future, any action against the Communist Government of Russia, since they have recognized it. Germany has just made a new treaty with Russia. We hope that the people will rise against the Communists; but nobody can say when this will happen. It may be sooner than is generally believed."

"The recent Congress was not formally a monarchist movement," said Paul Milliukoff, who was Foreign Minister in the Kerensky Government and now conducts in Paris a Russian newspaper devoted to republican principles. "But it certainly served the monarchist cause, which accounts for the absence of the democratic parties from the Congress.

Imperial Family Question

The Grand Duke Nicholas may not aspire to the throne personally, because this is a question to be decided by the whole imperial family. His views may be the most well-intentioned in the world. But he is led by persons who are openly absolutist and devoted to the cause of restoring the old regime."

Thus the Russian emigres, of whom there are estimated to be about 2,000,000, are variously divided on the question of what course should be pursued in opposing the Soviet regime. There are the avowed monarchists supporting Grand Duke Nicholas, the Centre and Left groups of the recent Congress, and several shades of republicans and socialists.

Professor Struve said that the Nationalist group forming the Congress represented a majority of the emigres, while M. Milliukoff regards it as representing not more than ten per cent. About three-fifths of this group seems to favor supporting Grand Duke Nicholas without formally committing itself to a monarchy. The remaining two-fifths of the Congress and the elements not represented in the Congress favor various other policies.

"Second Love"

By MALCOLM DUART

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

John Parrish leaves his young wife, Audrey, chafed by her frequent references to her wealth and his poverty. Marcie Allen, young, lovely, very advanced in her views, proceeds to vamp him, and gradually he becomes interested. She has been ordered from her own home because of her "new" ideas, and has been invited by Audrey to be her guest. Audrey's handsome father, Harry Morton, comes from Europe, and Marcie immediately sets her cap for him. He laughs at her, and she confesses to him that she has made love to Parrish, and that the young man now is angry because she teased him. As the last chapter closes, Marcie, Morton and Parrish are at dinner in Audrey's house (Audrey has gone away to make an opportunity for this meeting) and Parrish has just angrily accused Marcie of trying to vamp Morton.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Marcie cast a quick glance at the door, but the murmur of Morton's voice at the telephone in the hall outside, reassured her.

"I didn't throw you over, John boy," she said, her words low-toned and soothing. "Don't you remember—you took me by the shoulders and shook me dreadfully?"

He leaned nearer and tightened his grip upon her arm.

"But you are after Audrey's father now!" he whispered. "Aren't you?"

"Sh!" she hissed. "He's coming."

Parrish withdrew his hand and straightened up. Morton entered an instant later, whistling.

"Don't know how I'm going to fill your place, John," he said. "That fellow I was trying to get can't leave his job."

Parrish turned to him. His face was flushed from his brief colloquy with Marcie.

"Well, I want to leave right away," he said.

"Okay with me," Morton said. "I'll run my business—and I suppose Audrey can handle her finances herself."

"She can't handle anything!" Parrish growled, putting down the forkful of food he had just lifted. "You ought to have seen the fool account book she showed me not long ago. Said her funds were twelve hundred dollars short. Turned out that she had forgotten to subtract her household expenses from the balance she had written down."

Morton smiled, and took a sip from his wine glass.

"By the way," said Marcie, innocently. "Did you ever give me the money from my stock that that you sold?"

Parrish turned scarlet. Morton looked toward him with interest. "Been handling some of Miss Allen's funds?" he inquired.

"Forgot all about it," Parrish said. "I put the money in the safe down at the office, and with one thing and another, my mind was so full—I'm sorry," he concluded, turning to the girl. "What did you do without money?"

"Oh, I had a little—and charged what I bought to Audrey's account," she said placidly.

She cast a glance at Parrish and went on: "Do you know what I did, Mr. Morton? I found Mr. Parrish's emerald pin that he—he lost, and I took it down town and sold it, and he got it back and made me return the money. Wasn't that awful of him?"

Parrish looked at her aghast. "You told him that because you thought I'd tell him!" he accused.

Morton was watching them as one might view a play.

"Wouldn't you have told?" she asked, innocent eyes fixed upon the younger man.

He lowered his head. "I might have."

The girl clapped her hands, triumphantly. "See? That's why I told."

"I didn't lose the pin, anyhow," Parrish said, directing his words toward his plate. "I threw it away. And she knew it!"

Shifting his knife and fork around, he was silent for a moment or two, and then went on. "She didn't actually steal the pin, Mr. Morton—I think she—"

"Steal it!" The girl's voice raised. "Who said I stole it? Why, how horrible!" She dropped her hands to her lap and looked at Parrish accusingly. "How can you use such words about me?"

His forehead wrinkled in quick astonishment. "Why, I said you didn't steal it! I said—"

Her handkerchief came up to her eyes in her two hands. "He accuses me of stealing!" she wailed.

Parrish's face wore an expression of complete misery, as he turned to his father-in-law for aid.

"You heard what I said, sir," he appealed. "I was defending her from a false impression, wasn't I?"

Morton, who had been sitting easily, looking from one to the other, now interposed.

"Miss Allen," he said quietly.

She looked from the side of the handkerchief, which still was before her eyes.

"Put down the handkerchief," he continued.

She obeyed.

"Now go on with your dinner," he said. "Parrish, I understood you correctly. And Miss Allen—" she was dipping into her food now, with entire composure—"I quite understood you."

She nodded and smiled at him. Parrish, confused and troubled, had nothing more to say for the remainder of the meal. After it was over, he asked Morton if he might be excused.

The older man walked with him to the door. "Are you sure you want to resign your job?" he asked, as Parrish stepped onto the porch.

"I'd better, Mr. Morton," said the other. "I'm utterly miserable. You know that."

"Poor lad!" Morton patted him on the shoulder. "But it may come out all right."

When Parrish had gone, his host called to Marcie. "Suppose we sit on the lawn until Audrey comes," he suggested.

"As I get it," he said, as they took their seats outside, "you appropriated Parrish's emerald. Is that one of your little customs?"

"Stealing, you mean?" She was undisturbed. "Oh, goodness, no. I think I did that for devilment. Besides, I was likely to need the money, you know."

"That's the reason for pilfering, generally," he commented. "You lifted some of my liquors, too, didn't you?"

She nodded. "Some boys came," she explained.

"Reason enough," he returned politely. "Is anything else missing?"

"I can't think of anything," she said, after reflection. "But, Mr. Morton—truly I'm not a thief. I just do things on impulse, you know. That is, I do things if they're exciting."

"I see—I see." Morton mused. "Actually, I don't suppose you'd have taken that pin if it had belonged to a stranger."

"Certainly not," she said eagerly.

"Poor kid!" he murmured, half aloud.

Her eyes widened in astonishment. "You mean me?"

"Yes—poor Marcie." He was tapping thoughtfully on the arm of his chair. "Full of life and energy—needing something to do in the world—no duties to perform—nothing useful to look forward to—running after the pretty butterflies until you're lost in the forest—"

He looked up, and saw the girl's eyes were wet.

"Poor little kid," he concluded.

She produced her handkerchief and applied it to real tears, this time. "You—you said you were a hard-boiled rounder," she choked. "I always thought I was one, too!"

"Stuff and nonsense!" He waited until she lowered the square of lace she held to her eyes. "You'd become one, fast enough—and there isn't anything in the world so wretched to look at, and to be, as an old bat—a tough woman whose youth has gone.

"But you're just a kid now—a pathetic little kid."

She began to cry, audibly.

"There, there," he soothed. "I was just talking. I didn't want to hurt your feelings."

"You didn't hurt them," she sobbed. "I was I—I hurt myself. I'm no good! You said so."

He started forward as if to go to her. Then his eyes puckered at the corners, amusedly, and he sank back. She was not looking—her hands covered her face.

"The only man in the world I ever was really attracted to," she went on. "And you see so plainly what I'm headed for—just to be an old bat!"

She paused, but as he said nothing, she went on. "Chasing butterflies—hunting happiness. That's all I do. And when I almost find it, he sees through me—he knows what I am going to be—and, of course, he won't have me!"

Again she waited. He continued silent, and she moved her hands so she could look at him.

"What are you laughing for?" she demanded sharply.

"Because, Marcie, you're a fraud." He shook with merriment, while she stared. "My cue, I suppose, was to say: 'Now, Marcie—the old days are over. Harry will take care of you.' Wasn't that your idea?"

Her look of indignation passed, and was slowly succeeded by a smile. "I hoped you'd say something like that," she said demurely.

"But I didn't. I've seen that stunt tried before."

She dropped her arms limply over the sides of her chair.

"Goodness—don't I do anything new? Haven't I any new ideas of vamping?"

He smilingly shook his head. "There aren't any new ideas in courtship. They've all been used."

A taxicab drew up to the curb.

"There's Audrey," said Marcie, warningly.

Morton arose and went to meet his daughter. Returning, he placed her in his own chair, and went to get another for himself.

"I've been trying to get him interested," Marcie said.

"And just made him laugh," surmised Audrey.

Morton came back, and the three sat talking as it grew dark. Night had fallen when Audrey, with a start and a whispered word, told them that her husband was coming in the gate.

"How do you do, John?" Audrey said, as he came up to them.

He bowed, stiffly. "Good evening Audrey," he returned. Then he addressed Marcie. "I brought your money." He held a roll of bills in his hand, and this he extended to her. "I'm sorry I forgot it. Goodnight." He looked at Morton. "Goodnight, sir."

He hesitated, then bowed to Audrey, and was moving away.

She arose hastily and went to him. "John—wait!" she said.

Toronto, Ontario.—"My daughter is 16 now and has been an invalid ever since she was six months old and has been compelled to remain out of school the greater part of the time. We have tried different kinds of medicine, but none helped her much. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was run-down, and it had helped me so much that I thought it might help her at this time. She has gained ever since she began taking it. She attends school every day now and goes skating, and does other out-of-door sports. I recommend this medicine to any one who is run-down and nervous and weak."—MRS. ACTOR COMPENSATED FOR "ROUGH" VOICE

Injury to Vocal Cords in Storm Scene Gets $1,624 From Los Angeles Jury

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—A good voice is as essential to a motion picture actor as to one in the spoken drama, the state industrial Accident Commission ruled in effect here yesterday when it awarded $1,624 compensation to Alfred Allen for an injury to his vocal cords.

Allen, while engaged in a motion picture storm scene, was standing on an artificial dock near an artificial ship, and was struck by an unusually heavy gust of the artificial storm.

Dropping eighteen feet, there was nothing artificial about the ground which he struck, and such was the fury of the storm and the force of the fall, according to the commission, that he broke a vocal cord, and his voice since has been permanently "rough." He claimed that his "rough" voice has a bad effect upon the actors with whom he plays.

OCTOGENARIAN IS KEEN WOOD CARVER

Delicate and Intricate Work Done With Clasp Knife Followed Effort to Embellish Doll's House

MONTREAL, August 7.—Mr. Alphonse Leclaire, former wholesale dry goods merchant and the oldest living pupil of St. Mary's College, enters his eighty-fourth year today. Mr. Leclaire devoted some seventy years of his life to business, to travel and to journalism. For a number of years he edited La Revue Canadienne in Montreal; for many years he travelled in Europe, visiting England, France, Belgium, Holland, Spain, Italy and Switzerland.

It was not until some thirteen years ago, however, that this genial Montrealer "found himself." It took three-score years and ten to do so; but he has achieved the most astonishing work in those years of the Autumn of his life—so he considers, himself—than in the longer period of his earlier life.

The sphere of activity which he entered into, entirely by accident, was that of the wood carver.

At his residence, 441 Strathcona Avenue, Westmount, Mr. Leclaire received his interviewer graciously, and led him to his atelier, a veritable small temple, where he spends hours that are considerably longer than those of any union man. It is a temple, inasmuch as this studio contains no less than seventy beautifully carved ornaments, framing scenes from the life of the Saviour.

House Filled With Specimens

The whole house is filled with specimens of the most intricate and artistic achievements of the wood sculptor. An arcade, carved in mahogany, with columns and arabesques, floral designs and inscriptions—and all carried out with the aid of a common clasp knife.

Mr. Leclaire's house is filled with frames, with sideboards of the etagere type, with flower stands and book covers, all testifying to the patience and extreme skill of their creator. In the dining-room stands a mahogany table with ample room for twelve persons, carved in the most delicate patterns, no single part alike, still extremely harmonious and reposeful.

After pointing to these carved treasures that fill the house and beautify it, Mr. Leclaire led the interviewer to his studio. The four walls are lined with frames, each one different, each one testifying once more to the natural talent which this man only found after he had passed his seventieth year.

It was purely by chance, Mr. Leclaire explained, after having shown the penknife with which he creates his work, that he discovered his natural bent for this art. He whittled away at a mahogany column, upon which were faintly traced the pencil lines of the pattern.

Start Made With Doll's House

"It was one Summer, late in the season," he said, "at my Summer home at Dorval. My man, who looked after the work around the house, suggested that he build some hen houses, and I agreed. At the same time I told him that I would like to cut out a pattern to make them look better. I had no idea that anything much would come out of it; but my little grandchildren became most interested, and demanded that I make doll houses for them. That was the beginning."

When he returned to Montreal that Fall, Mr. Leclaire continued, he carved the ornamental parts of a big doll's house. It was found to be so imposing, however, that the children mersly stood around open-eyed with admiration, and were too awed to play their childish games in this astonishing puppets' home.

"So I continued," said Mr. Leclaire modestly, "and I made a few little frames. You have seen them. They are the early specimens. I became passionately fond of my art, and I have experimented with many things since."

A huge mirror, some ten feet by five in dimension, is framed by mahogany that looks like lacework. An old French clock reposes on a carved pedestal—everywhere there are signs of the undying industry of the wood carver. A great number of Mr. Leclaire's works have been exhibited at the Art Gallery, and at the Canadian Handicrafts Guild exhibitions.

At present Mr. Leclaire is working on an altar, which he intends to present to one of the churches in Montreal. The first columns, delicate, reposeful and handsome, indicate a complete work of extreme taste and beauty.

Criminal Dock Is Strewn With Summer Flowers

LONDON, Aug. 6.—From now until the end of September, every prisoner who stands in the dock at the Old Bailey will smell the fragrance of sweet-scented herbs, and look across the court at garlands of roses.

These flowers and herbs commemorate the bad old days when the Old Bailey was a less sanitary place than it is now. The custom of strewing herbs and presenting "My lords, the King's justices," with fragrant blooms dates back to the time when the odor from the underground dungeons swept through the unventilated courthouse, spreading infection and indeed on more than one occasion causing the death of the judge—the jury, and most of the court officials.

Every morning during the Summer session, the attendants at the Old Bailey will strew dried petals and herbs round the dias on which "my lord" and his attendant and sheriffs sit to dispense justice to the city's evildoers.

The picturesque ceremony is carried out an hour before the doors of justice are thrown open, so that when "my lord" makes his triple bow of greeting to the bar, the jury, and the public, the court air is laden with the perfumes of wild roses and lavender.

The four judges of the Old Bailey receive their garlands from the ushers when they arrive every morning, and each alderman and sheriff is handed a nosegay to take into court.

The bouquets are the gifts of the City Corporation, which allocates a sum of money for them every year.

NOTED SAILOR TELLS SOME EXPERIENCES

Capt. Millet, Who Served Aboard Cutty Sark, Now Owns Large Wharf on Thames

MONTREAL, August 4.—A link with the days of clipper ships and of the queen of them all, the Cutty Sark, is in Montreal.

Captain John L. V. Millet, when still under sixteen years of age, shipped as an apprentice on a "hell" ship, and later on the Cutty Sark, in the days when men too slow were "helped" along the decks, when officers were picked for skill with fists as much as for seamanship, and when the ship's biscuits were condemned naval stores.

Those days have gone for the seaman and for Captain Millet. He is now managing director of a firm which owns the largest private wharf on the Thames, and member of the Port of London authority.

But the "something about a sailor" is still there after years of a land job, in the complexion tanned a nice oak brown, the supple strength born of shinning up masts "as high as Heaven," the trimness of the ship's officer, and the old salt's heaven-sent gift of spinning a yarn, embodied in his book of clipper days, "Yarns of an Old Shellback."

Was Loftiest Sailing Ship

Looking the landsman's ideal of a sailor, Captain Millet at the Mount Royal Hotel settled down to talk of the old days. "I served my apprenticeship in the famous employ of Captain Willis, otherwise known as White Hat, because he always wore a tall white hat. I was in the sailing ship Tweed for the first part of my apprenticeship, one of the most famous ships of that day. She was the loftiest ship sailing out of London, and it was like going to Heaven to go aloft.

"I went to sea at fifteen years, and served in the Tweed on a two years' voyage. She was regarded by every man on board as a hell ship, on account of the hard way in which we were treated. If a man wasn't quick enough, the officers "helped" him along, and it was no unusual sight to see an officer giving a man a beating. Food was of the poorest description. The biscuits were probably condemned naval stores.

Joins Cutty Sark

"I next joined the Cutty Sark, which, then, as she is now, was the most famous clipper ship of her day. She was built in 1860 by Denny, of Dumbarton, and was the result of the experience gained both by American and English clipper ship builders. She was built entirely of teak with iron frames, but as the Suez Canal was opened in the same year as the ship was built, the result being that steamers took away the tea trade, she had no opportunity of showing her sailing qualities in the tea trade, with the exception of one voyage when she was sailing against the famous Thermopolae. They left China together, but the Cutty Sark had the misfortune to lose her rudder off the Cape, and although the owners of the Thermopolae refused to let the log book be seen, it was generally accepted as a fact that at the time of the accident, the Cutty Sark was 400 miles ahead. She lost a week in rigging a jury rudder and owing to the strain on it she could not be sailed at a greater speed than eight miles an hour. But despite the delay she arrived in London only ten days after the Thermopolae.

"The Cutty Sark was unlucky in her captains and it was not until Captain Woodgett took command of her in 1886 that the ship found her affinity in him. He had her for ten years in the Sydney-Australia trade, during the whole of which time, it was his proud boast that no ship had ever passed him and that every ship that he sighted he passed. The result was that for ten years the ship under his command made such passages that she could be looked for at her home port or in Sydney almost to the very day."

Takes Up Steam

On leaving the Cutty Sark at the age of twenty, Captain Millet forsook sail for steam, the pay of four pounds, ten shillings a month for second mate and six pounds a month for chief mate not offering sufficient inducement. Also, he wished to attain command as quickly as possible. He joined a small steamer trading to Bombay, as third mate and bo'sun, finding out later it was more bo'sun than third mate.

Captain Millet remained on this ship, serving through all officers' grades at the captain's request, and as the captain had never retained his officers more than one voyage the owners were so struck that Captain Millet obtained his first command—the steamer Brackadalle. Subsequently he commanded the Weybridge and finally joined a firm ashore, which prospered and in which he is now managing director.

Last year he was elected to the membership of the Port of London authority. No independent candidate had even been elected and no one took his candidature seriously, but he was elected by 6,900 votes, displacing an old member.

Galsworthy's Record

American plays have invaded London in force, but the individual prize for plays running in foreign capitals must go to John Galsworthy, who has three plays going simultaneously in Vienna. "The Forest," "Loyalties" and "Windows" are being performed at three of the principal theatres in the Austrian capital.

NANAIMO BOARD HEARS SEQUEL TO RECENT FARRAR LAWSUIT

Outside Pupils Are to Be Admitted to High School on Certain Restrictions, as Hitherto

NANAIMO, Aug. 7.—A letter received by the Nanaimo School Board from the Minister of Education, stating that changes were being made in the School Act as the result of the recent court verdict in the case of Nanaimo School Board vs. Farrar, brought on a lengthy discussion at the regular meeting of the board last evening regarding the admission of outside pupils to the local high school, and it was decided to continue as last year, with the same charge, i.e., $35, with certain concessions to be made in cases where there was more than one pupil from one family. Pupils not resident of the city must, when registering, be accompanied by a parent or guardian, who must be prepared to pay the fee, and sign a document, which is rather drastic in nature, but necessary in order to cover certain legal technicalities.

Principal de Macedo reported that the number of pupils to attend the high school this year would be increased from 260 to 360, judging from the number of passes at the recent examinations. This, the board realized, would necessitate the employment of several more teachers, and extra accommodation being provided. Applications will be called for four teachers by the board for the high school, and the appointment of Mrs. G. Georgina Clarke, of Victoria, to the teaching staff of the high school was made.

On the recommendation of Dr. Young, sanctioning the appointment, Miss Kerr, a graduate of the University of B.C., will report for duty at the opening of school as school nurse.

On the suggestion of Chairman Shaw, which was heartily endorsed by the other members of the board, the secretary was instructed to write the members of the teaching staff, in both high and public schools, complimenting them on their excellent services, and the good results attained.

Large Percentage Of Taxes Is Paid

LADYSMITH, Aug. 7.—At the regular meeting of the City Council, held on Wednesday evening, August 4, a report was given by Mr. C. G. The aldermen commented most favorably upon the response made by the ratepayers of the city.

FIRE DESTROYS GRANTHAM HOUSE

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Allberry Are Burned Out When Residence Is Gutted

COURTENAY, Aug. 6.—Fire completely destroyed the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Allberry, of Grantham, on Thursday evening; besides doing damage to fruit and other trees.

Mr. Allberry, a settler under the Dominion Soldier Settlement Board, is well-known throughout the district being connected with most of the associations of the various branches of agriculture. After lighting an oil stove, Mrs. Allberry was horrified to find it a mass of flames that spread with extraordinary rapidity. She at once called her husband who was working on the farm, but the two-story wooden house, which was not a new one, was soon burning fiercely, lighting up the surrounding country. Neighbors, summoned by telephone, rendered valuable help and confined their efforts to saving nearby poultry houses. Little damage was done to the poultry plant, which is well-known as the home of White Leghorns. The contents of the home were also lost, the occupants saving only the clothes they were wearing. Mr. and Mrs. Allberry settled here in 1920. Mrs. Allberry was a former resident of Victoria, and a daughter of Rev. J. W. Flinton, formerly of Victoria, and now of St. George's, Courtenay, and St. Andrew's, Sandwick.

NEW SERVICE TO EAST JUSTIFIED

CANADA - EAST AFRICA AND INDIA ROUTE SHOWS SUCCESS

Automobiles Constitute Principal Canadian Export—Expect to Build Up Fine Trade in Time

MONTREAL, August 4.—Despite the fact that the Canada-East Africa-India service of the American and Indian Steamship Line has only been in operation for a matter of three months, its experience fully justifies its inception by the Ellerman & Bucknall Ss. Co., Ltd., is the statement of the agents in Montreal, the New Zealand Shipping Co., Ltd.

It is admitted, however, that the line is still in its infancy and that there is much room for improvement in the volume of shipments of Canadian produce to Africa and India.

Autos Principal Shipments

Automobiles constitute the principal Canadian export carried on this new route, the vessels only calling at St. John, N. B., to take on cargo offering after loading with American produce in New York. The return service, which omits several of the ports visited on the eastbound route, provides a call at Halifax instead of St. John, the steamers proceeding to New York after discharging any cargo for this country.

Whereas the eastbound service arranges for a monthly sailing from Canada, the return is, at present, more successful, a call being made at Halifax every three weeks.

Produce brought from India is loaded at Rangoon, Calcutta and Colombo, though other goods, transshipped at those ports from other centres in India, is also carried to Halifax and New York. Westbound cargoes constitute principally teas, burlaps, canned goods such as pineapples, sago and rice.

Operate Through Mediterrancan

Both the eastbound and westbound service is operated through the Mediterranean and the Suez Canal, and, on the eastbound run to Rangoon, steamers call at Aden, Mombasa, Kilindini Tanga, Zanzibar and Dares-Salaam, East Africa, Colombo, Ceylon, Madras, Rangoon and Calcutta.

In the three months that the service has been in operation there have been four sailings from St. John to East African and Indian ports, the first sailing having been that of the Ss. Kansas, from New York on April 10, and from the New Brunswick port on April 15.

As the new service becomes better known in this country, it is expected that a larger trade will be built up between Canada, East Africa and India, excellent trade opportunities having been expended by Mr. H. A. Chishoim, Canadian trade commissioner in India, who returned from that country several months ago.

The time used is Pacific Standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours, from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table, the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

The height is in feet and tenths of a foot, measured from the average level of lower low water.

WHAT IS MEANT BY SHIP'S TONNAGE

Varieties of Tonnage Statistics Are Explained by Shipping Periodical

It is not a surprising thing really, but even seafaring people do find difficulty often in explaining the varieties of tonnage which apply to a ship. To most landsmen as a rule the matter is a complete mystery. The trouble is that the one word "tonnage" is ambiguous, and certainly the confusion which arises from the existence of the ton (weight) and the ton (volume) is apt to be baffling. This basis of a ship's tonnage is the "ton of measurement," a space containing one hundred cubic feet.

But complications arise because there are quite a number of ways of dealing with tonnage. For example: "gross tonnage" indicates the entire interior capacity of a ship expressed in the tons before referred to—one hundred cubic feet.

Registered Tonnage

"Registered tonnage" or "net registered tonnage" is calculated from gross tonnage by making certain deductions, such as the space occupied by engines, boilers, bunkers, crew and navigating quarters. The charges which a ship has to bear when such affairs are considered as dock and harbor dues, pilotage dues, and light dues are levied upon registered tonnage.

Because this registered tonnage is supposed to represent the freight-earning capabilities of a vessel, it is a subject of the greatest importance, from the point of economics, to the ship owner.

Registered tonnage does not give any idea as to the exact size of a ship. One vessel may have a certain registered tonnage, and another of identical dimensions may have quite a different registered tonnage figure, despite the fact that the pair may have the same displacement. It furnishes no reliable comparison between one vessel and another as to displacement, dimensions, or deadweight capacity. A ton of cargo usually occupies less than one hundred cubic feet, so that a tramp steamer's cargo tonnage may exceed her gross tonnage.

The "deadweight tonnage" of a merchant ship is the weight of cargo, stores, and fuel reckoned in tons of 2,240 lbs.

"Cargo tonnage" is reckoned either by weight or by measurement, a ton by weight on this continent is 2,240 lbs., and by measurement it is, as a rule, forty cubic feet. When a cargo rate is quoted, it is assumed that the rate means either per ton weight or per ton measurement, at the option of the owner of the vessel. Thus on a heavy cargo the charge would rest on the ton by weight, while on a light but bulky cargo the charge would rest on the measurement ton.

A ship's displacement is the amount of water which she displaces when afloat. This amount, expressed generally in cubic feet, is called the volume of displacement, the corresponding weight is termed the weight of displacement; herein is found the explanation of the "displacement tonnage" of a vessel.—White Star Magazine.

Sir Walter Raleigh May Have Believed His Weird Stories

When Sir Walter Raleigh related stories of the golden city of Manoa, with its gilded king, and of El Dorado, in Guinea, as well as tales of tribes of headless men whose eyes and mouths were in their chests, it is not unlikely that he believed them himself. Nor does it necessarily follow that there was no foundation for the weird yarns, according to Mr. A. Hyatt Verrill in The Wide World.

Raleigh's interpreters necessarily were limited in their ability to make clear the Indians' meaning to the Englishman, while, perhaps most important of all, Raleigh had not learned that the South American native always tells what he believes will most please the white man and invariably he will exaggerate and surround with mystery anything he himself does not understand.

Even the folk-lore of the natives of Guinea, it has been found, is based upon some fragment of fact, and in this manner the English explorer might easily have conveyed his fantastic stories back to Europe in the best of faith.

"In Dutch Guinea a few years ago, a tribe was discovered, many members of which had malformed hands, with only three fingers. With Indian superstition these freaks were regarded as peaimen, or witch-doctors, and as such malformations are often hereditary, it is easy to understand how another Indian, or even a white man, seeing two of these people, might readily assume that three-fingered hands were a characteristic of a whole tribe," says the writer.

Regarding the story of headless Indians, the Atoradis and several other tribes had a custom of painting hideously-grotesque faces on their chests and concealing their own heads by long hair and feather ornements, so they might appear as headless beings to the terrified Indians they attacked on their cannibal raids.

The Only Daniel

Lord Harris, the veteran cricketer, who recently celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday, is one of the most retiring of men. Especially does he object to being made a fuss of socially.

"I never knew of but one man who was not spoilt by being lionised," he remarked upon one occasion.

"And who was he?" asked a lady who was present.

"The prophet Daniel, madam," was the ready reply.

Inspection Made of Reduction Plants

The supply of pilchards at the West Coast fisheries is large, according to Major J. A. Motherwell, Chief Inspector of Fisheries, who has just returned from an inspection of that section of the inspectorate.

Besides inshore fishing, catches are taking place more than twenty miles offshore. One company is using two old steel whaling vessels, and another has a sailing boat seventy-five feet in length.

Major Motherwell points out that the absence of Orientals in the fishery results in the employment of from fifty to one hundred white employees.

Ss. Great City, Captain Davies, sailed at 9 p.m. Friday, after bunkering at Union Bay.
